THE GRAVE IN THE WOOD.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY KIT CLARKE.

I met a little maid, one day,
Among the leafy trees;
Her golden ringlets soft were fanned
By every passing breeze.

A blooming violet raised its head
Above its bed of grass,
And blushed in many colored hues
To see the maiden pass.

For often in that happy time
We strolled the stream along,
And listened to the whippoorwill,
And the nightingale's rich song.

A year passed by; another rolled
Adown the halls of time;
And summer, with its rosy beams,
Again made earth sublime.

A million melodies I heard,
Amid the leafy bowers;
The feathered warblers of the wood
Were toying with the hours.

The violets had bloomed again,
The birds their vigils kept,
But 'neath the sod, under the trees,
My little maiden slept.

CHAPTER XVIII.
LADY PECHFORD AT HOME.

Every one liked Lady Pechford and every one liked visiting her. Everything at her house was in good taste; and the society that she gathered around her was pleasant. She was a woman of infinite tact, and it was to this quality that she was chiefly indebted for her great popularity. She never offended any one; she never forgot any one, and she made every one feel at ease in her company. She was possessed, too, of a certain amount of diplomatic skill and was constantly successful where a greater character would have failed; for Lady Pechford, though in the main a kind-hearted, well-disposed woman, had nothing great about her. Had she been great she would not have been so universally popular; and, in fact, her littlenesses were her strong points, winning for her favor with society; and she cared more for society than friendships. It was well to have friends, as a sort of reserve to fall back upon; but society to her was the charm of life, and she delighted in being the centre and leader of a polished circle. Hence, any addition to her little kingdom was very welcome; and in John Carteret she acknowledged an acquisition. He was a distant relative—he was her godson; therefore, she could patronize him and exact from him a kind of deference; whilst, at the same time, she felt that he reflected credit upon her, and that her influence was in some degree extended through her relations with the handsome curate.

At a quarter to seven Lady Pechford found herself in her drawing room—giving the last touches to the flowers, moving a vase here, arranging a curtain there, giving an air of ineffable grace to the whole, such as no hired hand could produce.

Having completed these details according to her satisfaction, she stood for a moment before one of the mirrors and smiled complacently at the figure it reflected. No French marquise of acknowledged fascination need have disdained competition with Lady Pechford. She had been a very handsome woman, and the fading look that age naturally produced turned her into an interesting one. Her pale, amber-hued satin fitted round her in soft folds; and the delicate lace head-dress, fastened with gold pins, lay lightly upon her fair, silver streaked hair. There was, perhaps, a slight elaboration in her dress, but it served to carry out the idea that entered into one's mind of the French noblesse of a century ago.

She threw herself into one of the great lounging chairs and gave a gentle sigh. She could scarcely have told why or wherefore she sighed; for her present was really more in accordance with her taste than her past had been, and yet she occasionally indulged in a sentimental reverie over former days. "The old, old days, when cares sat lightly upon us—when we were young," she would say to some of her quondam acquaintances, and then turn away with inward thankfulness that she did not see much of them now.

Her husband had been a jovial sporting baronet, with not an aspiration beyond his hounds and horses; and for fifteen years of wedded life Lady Pechford had borne him solitary company at a large, dull, country house, with the periodical enlivenments of the hunting, fishing and shooting seasons, when the house was filled with jovial company, in utter antagonism to her ideas of what society ought to be.

Then she had turned her thoughts regretfully to some "charming society" she had mingled in during a short stay in Paris, and she pined for the graceful salons, so different from the stiff drawing-room at Driffington House, with its ugly drab curtains, and high backed chairs and sofas, that it was a martyrdom instead of a luxury to sit upon.

In the dreariness of her life Lady Pechford had taken to reading; and from the library shelves whereon they had been rusting for many years, found some readable books, and was enchanted by the description contained therein of the Hotel de Rambouillet, and of the influence the fair Marquise exercised upon its modes and language of the day. She pined for the brilliant crowd of authors of poets, of grandes dames, who assembled at the soirees of the fascinating Marquise. She envied the "Guirlande" of the fair daughter Julie; and felt that, could she experience such divine homage, her life would be perfect. And so she wandered through the pictures of French life down to Madame de Staël, at whom she paused as the embodiment of her dreams—"Ah! if only she was not a little handsomer," reflected Lady Pechford; "and probably the First Consul was of the same opinion. Looks are a great advantage to a woman—when she has a fair opportunity of using them."

At which point in her musings Lady Pechford would stop to pity her own lot, and feel how completely she was wasted in the country.

This had been the case, until Sir John met with an accident which terminated in his death. She nursed him carefully through his illness and remembered him with a tenderness more allied to romance than to any deeper feeling. Perhaps gratitude had its part in it, since Sir John had provided handsomely for her, enabling her to lead a life congenial to the visions she had dreamed of in the stiff old family house during her married days.

Occasionally she would look back upon the past and then she would sigh even as she had done this evening—not regretfully, but sentimentally—as being one of the artistic accompaniments of widowhood.

But Lady Pechford's reverie was interrupted by the arrival of her guests, the Welbys—young people not long married—Dr. Lovell and his two daughters, and a Captain Stanfield and his son.

In vain Lady Pechford looked for the door to open again and for John Carteret's name to be announced. He did not come, and she was just the least bit annoyed—for she did not care to be thwarted in any of her plans, and her word was usually law in her little realm.

Dinner passed, and the ladies, retiring to the drawing-room, drew their chairs round the brightly blazing fire, preparatory to a little confidential gossip before the gentlemen joined them.

"Fire always draws out the thoughts," said Charlotte Lovell. "Kate and I always have more to say to each other over our fire at night than at any other time during the day. I suppose the flames light up one's memory."

"What a brilliant idea, Charlotte!" returned Lady Pechford. "I have often thought that the fire is a book wherein one reads chapter after chapter of the past, present and future. There, that little jet of gas that nas sputtered out is sympathizing with me about Mr. Carteret, and telling me never to invite him again."

"Ah, but you will not take the advice!" said Mrs. Welby. "Mr. Carteret is such a delightful person, and so handsome! I made Frederick quite jealous with praising him."

"And his voice and manner are such a contrast to Mr. Smithson's," observed the elder Miss Lovell.

"But I don't always understand his sermons," said Charlotte. "Papa says there is something leveling about them that he is not quite sure of."

"My dear Charlotte," answered Lady Pechford, "your papa is dreaming. Besides, I am sure Mr. Carteret would not do so inharmonious a thing as introduce politics into his sermons. Certainly nothing democratic—he is quite too much of a gentleman for that."

"Oh, I don't see anything in what papa says; but then, I know nothing about politics, and so should not know whether they were in the sermon or not. Papa and Kate are the politicians. Kate reads the Times to papa every day and, actually, it does not bore her."

"I tried it with Frederick," said Mrs. Welby. "I did not like him to spend so much time over it by himself, and so I said we would read it together. But I soon gave it up—I had no idea how tiresome it was; and I can't imagine why people want to go into parliament, if they have to sit and listen to such stupid speeches as Frederick and I used to read. I found it worse than sitting without talking—for, of course, when one is silent one can go on thinking; and now I generally plan my ball dresses whilst Frederick is wading through his papers."

"Did you like Mildred Wardlaw's dress at the ball?" asked Charlotte Lovell.

"No—it was too fanciful. But Mildred thinks she may wear anything."

"Captain Stanfield thinks Mildred is the handsomest girl he ever saw," returned Charlotte. "I think he wouldn't be sorry if Charles would fall in love with her."

"Or she with Charles, perhaps," suggested Lady Pechford, a little sarcastically.

"Charles will never fall in love with any one," answered Charlotte; "he's too much taken up with his batteries, and his rifle bores, and his plans and all that sort of thing. I wonder he ever goes out, for he never cares to talk to ladies."

"He's very shy," said Miss Lovell, "and has not been used to ladies' society. He has been left to his father's care ever since he was five years old, and all his interest lies in the army and navy."

"Which will not make him very popular room," said Mrs. Welby. "For my part I think no one ought to speak of anything scientific or clever in a drawing-room. What do you think, Lady Pechford—it's too heavy, is it not?"

Mrs. Welby was a pretty little woman, who was very much admired at Linthrop, who babbled away, in a pleasant, ringing voice, a great amount of fashionable nothings, her quick black eyes giving them a point which they certainly did not of themselves possess. It was quite a study to watch her face in its constant changes; indeed, her eyes might be said to speak rather than her tongue, and her smiles to clothe with eloquence the baldness of her language.

Lady Pechford regarded her as a pretty ornament, but invariably retired from her company with the comment, "What a silly little woman!"

Nevertheless, the silly little woman enacted her part in the drama; for all people cannot play grandes roles, and her prettiness was attractive enough to carry off her defects. Her husband was a decidedly clever young man, likely to rise in the political world; and there was some rumor of his standing for Linthrop at the next election. And a man who can get into Parliament may some day get into the Ministry; and may even, at a still farther off day, become Prime Minister.

So reasoned Lady Pechford, and it gave a deeper interest to her ideas of the graceful influence of woman in state affairs. She had no advanced views for women; she simply argued for their natural and social influence, for their power of remodelling, of benefiting through refinement and education. She talked her modicum of politics with Mr. Welby, but required no vote herself to help to carry them into execution. Madame de Staël produced an effect, without a vote, greater than all the women's votes in England would achieve. It was a grand thing to have made one's self, in a measure, dangerous to the great Napoleon. What woman in England was equal to a parallel of the case now? And she called to mind the names of the female politicians of the day, and found she might write "Mene, mene," against them, in comparison with her idol.

No, Lady Pechford regarded the political emancipation of women as a delusion. She objected to their outstepping their true dominions. 'Let them refine, remodel men," she said; "but don't let them become men themselves."

Lady Pechford strove to bring together at her reunions the elements necessary for the perfection of society—and not without some result, since she succeeded in keeping up a series of pleasant evenings, and in having her invitations not only accepted, but sought for. Consequently, John Carteret's non-appearance annoyed her. She was not accustomed to having her invitations slighted; and Miss Wardlaw's arrival only increased her annoyance, as Captain Stanfield would have an opportunity of being a move ahead of her with respect to his son. And there was no doubt that, in point of worldly matters, Charles Stanfield would be a much better match for Miss Wardlaw than John Carteret.

Perhaps, however, it goaded Lady Pechford on; a spirit of emulation sprang up; there was a race, a contest before her; and the greater Captain Stanfield's admiration of Mildred, the greater became Lady Pechford's desire to secure her for her godson. She must exercise her diplomacy; and, despite John Carteret's indifference to her commands, she was willing to do not a little, but a great deal of manœuvring for his sake.

Miss Wardlaw looked handsomer than ever this evening—her fair hair rippling back from her forehead over a sort of cushion; and her dress, with its frills and ruffles—after the manner of an antique picture—reminding one of a court lady that Watteau would have been charmed to paint.

Lady Pechford had amicably engaged Captain Stanfield in conversation; Charles Stanfield was absorbed in some abstruse discussion with Dr. Lovell; Mr. Welby was looking over prints with Kate and Charlotte Lovell—so that Mrs. Welby was the only disengaged person for Miss Wardlaw to converse with, and the two soon became engrossed in discussing an amateur concert that was to be given in aid of the choir of St. Botolph's.

"I should like to sing in one of the quartets, if Frederick will let me," said Mrs. Welby. "I should have voice enough for that—the room is not very large. And it must be so nice to sing in public. Is Mr. Carteret going to sing?"

"I am afraid not. We asked him, but he does not seem to like the idea."

"What nonsense. What is the difference between preaching in public and singing in public, I wonder?"

"Mr. Carteret seems to think it is very great."

"Have you heard him sing?"

"No."

"Then, doubtless," said Mrs. Welby, "his voice is only a reputation, and he can't really sing. Lady Pechford said she had asked him here to-night; but I suppose now he is not coming, or we could have made him try his voice."

"No, I don't think he will come," returned Miss Wardlaw. But, as she spoke, the door opened and Mr. Carteret was announced.

"Ah!" exclaimed Lady Pechford, advancing to meet him, "I did not think you would be so hard hearted as to disappoint me altogether. Or perhaps I am indebted to Miss Wardlaw for seconding my appeal."

"I cannot flatter myself that Miss Wardlaw would have taken that trouble," returned John Carteret. "I do not think the subject was mentioned after we left you."

"Well, then, I must turn to the belief that music has been the loadstone; and I intend that you shall acknowledge its power to-night. But, first, I want you to talk over this concert with Mrs. Welby. No, Captain Stanfield, you are to stay with me, and finish your account of the Polar Seas," continued Lady Pechford, as the Captain was moving off in the direction of his son. "I am so interested in all that you have been telling me of the long night, and the aurora, and the brilliant crowd of auroras—and the bears and the white-faces—and, stay, one feel as if one would like to be a white bear, sitting amid fields of everlasting ice."

And so Captain Stanfield, who had been uneasily watching his son's apathy to aught but Dr. Lovell's description of his last experiment, was compelled to remain where he was and go over minutely the details of a voyage of which he had casually spoken.

Lady Pechford watched triumphantly the success of her manœuvre; and, watching, did not lose sight of danger. If Charles Stanfield would only wake up, he would by no means be a harmless rival. There was power in his firm eyebrows and deep-set eyes, if he ever happened to move them in any other direction than guns and fortifications. There might be the making of a statesman in him, if all that was said was true; and men of that class make rapid strides in the world. If he were to wake up, or if Mildred Wardlaw were to wake up, John Carteret would have no easy adversary to deal with. Charles Stanfield, despite his plainness, had something about him that would win attention.

"But, at present," said Lady Pechford to herself, "all is safe. Metaphorically speaking, a cannon ball might go off, and he wouldn't hear it."

And Lady Pechford devoted herself to Captain Stanfield—who, for the first time in his life, rebelled against having so good a listener.

But all things must come to an end; and so the account of the Polar Seas was at length unavoidably finished, and Lady Pechford had no excuse for prolonging it.

MR. HENRY APPY,
THE DISTINGUISHED VIOLINIST

The subject of this sketch was the eldest son of John Appy, solo violinist to King William the First, of Holland, and was born at the Hague, in that kingdom, in 1828. He commenced his musical studies at the age of 12, and, during one year's tuition from his father, he made such rapid progress that he was pronounced a musical genius. At the solicitation of many prominent amateurs, he gave a concert which met with great success, and his fame spread through the city as a wonderful performer upon the violin. The King sent for him and he had the honor of playing before his Majesty in the palace. Just as he had completed his arrangements to go to Paris his father died, and upon him then devolved the support of his mother, sister and younger brothers. He immediately arranged a series of concerts in Amsterdam and other cities, which, proving successful, were extended through Belgium, Germany and France. In 1848 he returned to the Hague and had the honor of playing in three concerts at the palace before King William the Second, who presented him with a gold medal and appointed him solo violinist. In 1850, in company with Mlle. Bertha Johannsen, he gave a large number of concerts through Holland. While performing in Amsterdam he made the acquaintance of a number of American merchants, ship owners, etc., who strongly urged him to visit the United States. Acting upon their advice, he sailed for New York as a guest of one of the ship owners, where he arrived in October, 1851, and gave several concerts, meeting with success. He performed with the Philharmonic Society, and shortly after made a tour of the country with M'me Biscaccianti. On his return to New York he was engaged for the Jenny Lind farewell concerts, of which he was a marked feature. He afterwards traveled with M'me Parodi, Baroness de Berg, Mrs. Bostwick and several other parties, under the management of Maurice Strakosch. Becoming tired of traveling, he settled in New York city, where he gave occasional concerts with his wife, formerly Miss Paine, who possessed a fine mezzo soprano voice, and was a great favorite. In 1853 he removed to Cincinnati, O., where he resided, pursuing his profession for some ten years. He again returned to New York city, where he remained until 1865, and then removed to Rochester, N. Y., where he connected himself with the musical conservatory, became leader of the Philharmonic Society, and devoted some time to teaching. Among his pupils who have achieved marked favor from the public may be mentioned Miss Matilda Toedt, violinist; the Misses Florence Wisner, Clara Strauss and Mattie Brewster, vocalists. About the middle of December last, impelled by a strong desire to resume his nomadic life, he, with the assistance of Mr. Alfred Von Rochow, his present manager, whose acquaintance he had previously made, organized a concert company and gave a series of concerts in the western part of New York state, which met with encouraging success. He then came to New York a few days since, and, after re-organizing his company, started out upon a brief summer season, during which he will travel through the west and Canada.

I CANNOT DANCE TO NIGHT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

I join the merry, giddy crowd—
I hear the music of the band—
He comes this way—be still, my heart—
But ah! he takes her by the hand!
Unloose my boddice—I am faint!
Take me from out this dazzling light—
The ball-room is no place for me—
For O, I cannot dance to night!

Is this the hour for which I wished?
Is it for this I've bound my hair?
O, lead me from this festive scene,
And let me perish—anywhere!
I hate her in my heart of hearts—
And I—I cannot dance to night,
Because it takes my breath away—
My slippers are so horrid tight!

A GLANCE AT EUROPE.

Sight Seeing in Italy.

FROM ROME TO NAPLES—THEATRE SAN CARLO—ROYAL PALACE—CITY AND BAY OF NAPLES—THE FORTIFICATIONS—LAZZARONI.

At the close of a lovely summer day we left Rome for Naples; the route at starting crosses the mournful Campagna, dotted with ruins as far as the eye can reach; we now pass the Castle Gondolfo, the Pope's summer residence, and then the town of Albano comes in sight. We next pass in succession several towns, some of them quite large; the road now crosses the Pontine Marshes; this was the signal for closing all the car windows, and the passengers commenced smoking, filling the cars with the fumes of tobacco to keep out the deadly malaria rising from this swamp, which is a sure promoter of the dreaded Roman fever. At Seperano, the frontier town of the Papal States, the train stops about half an hour, and the traveler has a chance to alight and look around him. The town is on a height to the left, and in the immediate neighborhood Marius and Cicero were born. Resuming our journey we pass the town of Pontecarvo, from which town General Bernadotte took his title of Prince. Then the celebrated monastery of Monte Cassino is seen, majestically overlooking the line. Now we approach the town of St. Germans, which stands at the foot of a rock at the side of a large plain backed by a feudal castle. At this place are the remains of a Roman theatre and amphitheatre. We pass several stations, in the vicinity of which the scenery is very wild and rocky; the road penetrates through deep cuttings of lava, attesting the existence, in past times, of active volcanoes in the neighborhood. We now stop a few minutes at the town of Teano, which contains 12,000 inhabitants; here are extensive Roman remains and a large feudal castle. It was at this place that the Consul Fluvius put to death all those Senators of Capua who had taken part with Hannibal. The road now crosses a great pla n, through which runs the river Volturno, and we arrive at Capua, a strongly fortified town of 11,000 inhabitants, where is a splendid cathedral and some ancient monuments. In 1501 the monster, Cæsar Borgia, took Capua by surprise, and massacred 7,000 of the inhabitants. Here are the remains of a great amphitheatre, capable of holding 60,000 spectators. We now pass Caserta, with its large royal palace, and approach Madaloni; here the railway turns from the hills and crosses a plain at the foot of the mountains, as Naples is approached, the soil is cultivated as market gardens. We now pass two cemeteries on the right and the train arrives at the station. Securing a fiacre, we were driven to the Hotel de Geneve, where we engaged accommodations during our stay, and hiring an intelligent guide, we started out to take a survey.

Naples is a city of 500,000 inhabitants and was formerly the capital of the Two Sicilies, but is now only a departmental town of the Italian kingdom. The ground on which the city stands is very uneven and altogether volcanic; it is protected by several forts and is considered a strong place; the streets are narrow and dirty, and few of the public buildings are remarkable for architectural beauty. The two principal streets are the Via Toledo and the Chiaga; the latter takes you to the harbor, the favorite promenade of the inhabitants, while the former contains the principal stores, hotels and fancy cafes. There is much life and animation at Naples, which makes the city stand in strong contrast to Rome. The Neapolitans are gay and fond of amusements. There are sixteen theatres in Naples, the principal one—the Theatre San Carlo—being one of the largest in the world. It has six tiers of boxes and is used principally for operatic performances. Adjoining the theatre is the Royal Palace, a large building of irregular plan. An attendant conducted us through the interior and into the state apartments; in one of the rooms of the palace was a beautiful little theatre, with parquet and gallery, which would hold, I should judge, about 500 spectators; the King's box was at the back of the gallery; this was closed with curtains of silver tissue, and from the theatre we went into the ball room, a magnificent apartment, the floor being of red stone, the furniture of yellow silk, the walls hung with costly paintings and chandeliers of surpassing beauty, suspended from the ceiling. From this we passed into several minor apartments, then into the Throne room. There was nothing showy about this apartment; here were the canopy and throne chairs, while on the floor lay a lion's skin. From this we were conducted through several other rooms, some of them containing beds, and then out on the piazza, where we have a magnificent view of the Bay of Naples. This promenade is a quarter of a mile long, lined on each side with orange and lemon trees, and the pathway paved with variegated marble. From this spot you can look down into the military arsenal, with its tiers of cannon and stocks of cannon balls. The Castle Nuovo, at the back of the palace, an ancient fortification, serves as a barrack, military magazine and cannon foundry. A handsome flight of marble steps leads from the palace to the Theatre of San Carlo, for the king's use when he wishes to witness an entertainment. The square in front of the palace is the principal station for the omnibuses. Here also are two magnificent bronze horses. The market square should also be visited in order to see the peasantry. It was in this square that the youthful king, Conraddin, was beheaded in 1268, and the insurrection of Masaniello broke out in 1647. The fashionable promenade of Naples is a narrow strip of ground, facing the bay, known as the Villa Reale. In this villa are shade trees and tropical plants, and ornamented with sculptures. A military band plays here every alternate afternoon; neither carriages nor horses are admitted into this ground. From a terrace that projects into the sea from the centre of this ground, a fine view of the bay and fortifications may be had. Along the parapet of the Mola, about the dusk of the evening, groups of the lazzaroni may be seen, some smoking, others talking or listening to the stories of one of their number; this scene is worthy of attention. At the back of the city, on a conspicuous height, stands the Castle of St. Elmo, and beside it stands the Church of San Martino. The view from this spot is indescribably grand; it takes in at one sweep the whole of the bay of Naples and the entire city. The Castel del Ovo is built on an island in the bay, where once stood a villa belonging to Lucullus; it is connected with the main land by a bridge, and forms one of the many picturesque features of the bay. In the square of Medina are several beautiful palaces and a magnificent fountain, the principal figure being a bronze statue of Neptune; from the three prongs of his spear the water spouts; close at hand are the two minor theatres, the Fenice and Carlino. In my next I will give you a description of the National Museum, Grotto of Pasilippo, the Catacombs, &c.

MONS LA THORNE.

THE ORGAN GRINDER'S STORY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY J. S. E.

A few evenings since a gentleman related a touching story, which I now transcribe for the readers of the CLIPPER:—

In the spring of 1868, when this gentleman was studying his profession—medicine—he, actuated by philanthropic motives and a desire to improve his knowledge by practical application, devoted considerable time to the amelioration of the condition of the ailing poor always to be found in large communities. Late one evening, while wending his way homeward through Baxter street, his progress was arrested by a woman, who requested him to see her husband who had met with an accident and broken his leg. Of course, he at at once compiled, and following her into a squalid cellar near by he found the husband, a swarthy, but not bad featured Italian, suffering with a fractured limb. A day or two afterwards he called to see how the poor man was getting along, and found him alone, sitting by a barrel organ and whistling in subdued tones the air of "Home, Sweet Home," through Pandean pipes. As the man gained his livelihood by exercising his lungs on the pipes and grinding music out of the organ, it is probable that the visitor would not have taken any notice of this circumstance had he not perceived the tears glistening in his eyes; but noticing this, he felt curious to know why this simple melody should so affect a rugged nature, and ent red into a kindly conversation with the Italian, and elicited from him the following history:—

In 1848 Joseph Cantoli became implicated with the carbonari and had to flee his native country, with his young wife and infant, and seek freedom and existence on the soil of England. Joseph, following the example of many of his countrymen, settled in London, where for a while he followed the occupation of a looking glass manufacturer, but sickness and misfortune overtaking him, he was thrown out of employment and had to adopt the vagabond mode of gaining a livelihood for himself and those dear to him, which he had since followed. Little Maria danced and p'ayed the tamborine, while her mother collected the scanty donations which the charitably disposed gave to them. Maria was a merry, light hearted little fairy, with a clear olive complexion and dark black hair, and although only seven years old, she could read and write, having been taught in a mission school in London. She was withal a loving child and received good treatment at the hands of her parents, who deprecated the hard fate that oblige l them to expose her to the inclemencies of the weather and the privations incidental to a vagabond life, while the cold northern climate seemed to have chilled their blood and sapped the energy, which, if properly applied, would have bettered their condition; but she was always cheerful, full of song and mirth, with a soul tuned to melody and an eye that rested with delight on the beautiful in nature.

When the sun shone and dried the damp grass, she found almost endless amusement and occupation, during their long marches from place to place, in gathering the wild flowers, which adorned the hedgerows, and decorating her pet—a diminutive spaniel—with wreaths and chaplets; and when the sun was setting, the wandering family would often eat their frugal fare together on the road-side, preparatory to begging shelter for the night in some barn or hayloft. During their evening bivouac Maria would sometimes read to her parents from some little books she carried with her and endeavor to enlighten their unlettered intellects, and then she would ask her father to play "Home, Sweet Home," accompanying himself with the Pandean pipes, for the good people who gave them shelter, for she liked that better than any of the other tunes the organ played. Thus they wandered through the different counties of England for about two years. Mrs. Cantoli was not strong, however, for she had been frequently ailing and now was growing worse. It was early autumn, and they had for a short time lived with a company of gipsies, who were encamped on a common not far removed from the county seat, where Joseph was enabled by his grinding to get the necessaries for the support of his family. The sick child preferred the quiet of the gipsies' camp and let her bed in one of the covered carts, to the close air and blasphemy of a traveler's lodging house, and begged to be allowed to remain where she was. And there, in the tented cart, she soon succumbed to that fell destroyer of the young and beautiful, consumption. One evening, when the stars were beginning to shine upon the camp and the rising moon shed a soft light into the cart where she lay, Maria, turning towards her father, who was anxiously watching by her, said:—

"Father dear, I am going away; kiss me." Then, giving her hand to her weeping mother, continued, "Good by, but—" and her voice became very low, "let me hear 'Home, Sweet Home' once more before I leave you."

Although his emotion was such as to almost prevent his doing it, still the father complied with his child's last request, and on the lonely common, surrounded by Gipsies, whose bronzed cheeks were bedewed with tears, the little body became inanimate clay, while the soul, ere the plaintive sound died on the night air, winged its flight to its long home, far beyond the twinkling stars and the silver moon.

DEAD GAME;

A Remarkable Story of a Pointer.

Commodore Scudder, of the United States Navy, had a double-nosed pointer dog of which he bragged a good deal, and for which he would have refused a larger sum than was ever offered for a dog since the creation of the world, but he is dead now—not Commodore Scudder, but the dog. Like the famous hound Geiert, he died a martyr to his high sense of honor. The commodore's story:—

"I went out hunting partridges one day," he said, "and took the dog along. We hadn't much luck at first; after a while Buster—that was the dog's name—stood and pointed at a covey of the finest birds I ever saw in all my born days. They were so low I guessed a dozen, or a dozen yards off, in plain sight, and I determined to fire at them as they lay. I lifted my gun, took deliberate aim, and would have killed a dozen at least; but before I could pull the trigger a courier dashed up with a dispatch which he said required immediate attention.

"I reserved my fire and read the dispatch. It was an order from the navy department to proceed without a moment's delay to Philadelphia, to take command of a squadron which was about to sail to the Mediterranean. I was so much excited, you understand, that I laid down my gun right on the spot and went off, leaving Buster there pointing at those birds like they were north stars and he was a mariner's compass, so to speak. I forgot all about him; but he was a faithful dog, Buster was—and like Casabianca, he wouldn't have left even a burning ship without orders.

"Well, I went to the Mediterranean, and cruised around for three years, having a first rate time. When I returned, at the end of the cruise, it occurred to me, as I stepped ashore in Philadelphia, to get out and see how things were at the place where I went gunning. John and I went—and the first thing I came across was my gun, lying there with the barrel covered with rust, and broken clean off the rotten stock. But what was my surprise, upon going a few paces further, to find the skeleton of that heroic double-nosed pointer, standing up just where I had left the dog three years before! He had never budged an inch, not a single solitary inch, that double-nosed pointer hadn't; but he had stood there and pointed at those birds until he had perished in his tracks! Well, sir, after shedding a tear over my departed friend, I went a few yards ahead, and—there were the skeletons of those partridges! I regard this as the most extraordinary circumstance that ever came under my observation; but, if any man presumes to doubt my word I'll shoot him on the spot."

A REMINISCENCE OF ENGLAND.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY KIT CLARKE.

On a pleasant day in the month of September, 1870, business as well as pleasure took me over the high road from Devizes to Chippenham, in "merrie old England." I had often read and heard of the associations connected with this road, and every scene was an object of interest to me. To the left of the road, about two miles from Devizes, a thickly wooded lane branches off, and leaving my conveyance, I walked down this beautiful lane until I reached a plain two-story cottage, embowered snugly among grand old trees and creeping vines—so thick indeed had the ivy twined round the dear old cottage that scarcely a window was visible. I entered at the gate and passed along the neatly kept gravel path to the southward of the house, where opens the broad and noble vale towards Trowbridge; to the right, across a little valley, and standing on a beautiful mound, amid grand old trees, stands the beautiful little village of Bromham. The little cottage is old now, and, though carefully guarded and tended by loving hands, must soon pass away. Here died, on the 26th of February, 1852, Thomas Moore, the greatest of Ireland's few poets, and among the greatest of England's many. At the time of his death he was aged seventy-two years and nine months, and was buried within view of his own house, in the churchyard of Bromham, and by the side of his two children.

The interior of the cottage is kept in nearly the same condition as it was when the poet died, nineteen years ago, and this, and his works, are all that remain of him, for though he had three daughters and two sons, he had the misfortune to see them all die. An old man and his wife, who knew Moore when living, keep the cottage now, and when strangers come to visit it—and they are not a few—the old couple are not forgotten. I left the place, and in going out met an old gentleman who was just entering. At the inn at Chippenham, in the evening, I met this gentleman again, with a copy of Moore's works in his hand. A conversation began between us in relation to the poet, and when I informed him that I was an American he expressed much pleasure, and said that he had just returned from a visit to that country, and was delighted with it. I took the volume of poems in my hand and accidentally turned to the one beginning:—

"She is far from the land," etc.

"Stop a moment," said the old gentleman; "Moore was my friend," and he related to me the incidents upon which that poem is founded. "If you wish I will try and recall them."

I was only too happy to listen to the story related in a very affecting and winning manner, of a beautiful and talented young lady—the only child of wealthy parents, who was betrothed to a young gentleman whom she loved dearly. The affection was mutual, and they lived but for each other. As a scholar, her attainments had won many honors and was beloved and respected—as was the young lady also—by all acquaintances. It was understood that when the young gentleman had finished his collegiate studies they were to be married, but alas! a war broke out—the war which eventually made the first Napoleon an Emperor—and the young man left his studies, bade farewell to his bride, and went and laid down his young life upon the first battle-field of that terrible war. When the news reached the lady she did not weep—did not shed even a single tear; not a word escaped from her lips; she but uttered a single sign, and with that sigh her young heart broke. Everything that was done to soothe her sorrow failed; not a tear ever escaped from her eyes, for her grief was too deep to find utterance in this manner, which is often a great relief. At last they took her to Italy—beautiful Italy!—and it was hoped that amid the sunny skies and balmy air of that fair land her grief might be assuaged. Her beautiful voice was often heard with delight, and, though she never smiled, yet she never failed to sing when requested. This was probably because he had always taken pleasure in listening to her while singing, and it reminded her of "her young hero," who slept his last sleep on that dreadful field of carnage. It was all useless; the scenes of excitement never for a moment let her forget her lover, and in a few months she found a lasting rest in an early grave—dying of a broken heart. It was upon her death that Moore wrote the following beautiful poem:—

She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps,
And lovers are round her sighing;
But coldly she turns from their gaze, and weeps,
For her heart in his grave is lying.

She sings the wild songs of her dear native plains,
Every note which he loved awaking;—
Ah! little they think, who delight in her strains,
How the heart of the minstrel is breaking.

He had lived for his love, for his country he died,
They were all that to life had entwined him;
Nor soon shall the tears of his country be dried,
Nor long will his love stay behind him.

Oh! make her a grave where the sunbeams rest,
When they promise a glorious morrow;
They'll shine o'er her sleep, like a smile from the West,
From her own loved island of sorrow.

FANATICISM.

Religious Maniacs—Wholesale Immolations.

Sectarianism in Russia is of a particular kind, and bears a gloomy character of barbarian fanaticism. The aggregate of the great number of sects whose principles are the negation of all institute of human nature is quite appalling. Persecuted by the Orthodox Church and government with the utmost severity, the secret doings and doctrines of these widespread sects are generally little known, and only now and then the news reaches us of some atrocity perpetrated on their part, or of the severe punishment inflicted upon the sectarians by the authorities. The Morelnicks—self-sacrificing saints—are a sect widely spread through Russia; they dig, with strange fantastic ceremonies, a deep hole in some remote place, around which they pile wood, brush, straw and other combustibles in great quantity. Then they enter the hole in solemn procession, set fire to these materials and burn themselves to death, chanting hymns and without uttering a cry of pain. Others assemble in some house, around which they have packed combustibles up to the very roof. The house, like all Russian isbas, built of logs, is in a few minutes enveloped in flames and the fanatics perish in them, undisturbed by the spectators, in what they consider a religious duty. They are thought to be saints who give themselves the baptism of fire. These "saints" are mentioned in the writings of some travelers as Gmelin, Pallas, Georgis, Lechupin and others.

Not long ago the peasants inhabiting the domaine of M. de Garseff, on the left bank of the Volga, concluded eventually to sacrifice themselves. They quietly made their preparations for the act and methodically butchered one another. One, a young wife, whose love of life was too powerful, wrested the knife from the man who wanted to immolate her and escaped to the nearest village, where she gave the alarm. When the people of this village came to the scene of carnage they found only two persons alive, surrounded by forty-seven corpses. The two were condemned to the knout, but at each blow they shouted triumphantly, as being martyrs.

Forty Moreistchicks in another place had come to the conviction that they had attained to a condition of perfect purity, which, however, might be endangered if they remained any longer upon earth. In order, therefore, to insure their salvation, they agreed to sacrifice each other's life. They proceeded to a barn some distance from the village, taking with them a block of wood, a cleaver and a rope. When all had formed in solemn array around the block, one stepped forward and laid his head upon it; another came up, seized the cleaver and cut his head off; the second was decapitated by the third, and so on. Not a cry of agony was heard, and thirty-nine victims lay weltering in their blood. The fortieth of these fanatics—a merchant—was yet alive; two of his sons lay dead at his feet; it was his turn to die, and for him the rope was reserved. When he had already put the rope around his neck he was overcome with remorse, as he had told his wife nothing of what was going on and felt troubled at leaving her alone on earth. He went back to the village, whence he conducted his wife to the barn. When she saw the horrible spectacle and her sons dead on the ground, her cries and lamentations attracted some persons who chanced to be near by. They reported the fact to the authorities, and the survivor of the forty was sent to Siberia.

FOOD FOR THE CURIOUS.—Apropos of the sketches we recently gave in the CLIPPER of human monstrosities, we now learn, through the Carrollton (Ill.) Gazette, of another of nature's freaks. "We are told," says that paper, "a singular story, by a party acquainted with the facts, with reference to a child of Mrs. Lizzie Walker, of Whitehall, the second daughter of our old friend Alex. Lakin. During the period in which Mrs. W. was enceinte, she was annoyed by the visits to her house of a strange cat, which had made several vicious attacks on one of her children. Fearing that the cat would inflict some injury upon the child, she availed herself of the first opportunity to kill the animal. When this was presented, she caught the cat, and, to make short work of it, she took it to the wood pile and cut its head off, which fell before her in such a manner that she momentarily witnessed its death grimaces. Last week the lady gave birth to a daughter, and it was discovered that the babe did not possess the right hand. On the stub of the arm is a perfectly formed cat's face, but without ears."

IN MEMORIAM.
("EDITH HALL.")

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY PHIL. H. IRVING.

Edith, farewell, can I forget
The grief that fell upon my heart
When we, long bound by loving ties,
Were doomed (through death) by fate to part.

Good bye, loved one, if thou but knew
The long, slow, future years; to fly,
Never again to clasp the hand
Or one so loved in days gone by.

In death, farewell, dear, loving heart;
In dreams I press the loving kiss;
You twine your arms around my neck,
And whisper treasured words of bliss.

Edith, wife, farewell, dear angel heart,
In this world "to meet no more,"
Again we'll meet, no more to part,
On "Heaven's bright and golden shore."

VILLE, FRENCHE, France, March 19th, 1871. U. S Frigate "Guerriere."

"MURDER WILL OUT."

A Few Simple Words—How They Were Remembered and What They Resulted In—A Great Crime Brought Home Twenty-five Years after its Perpetration.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY FOUCHE SECUNDUS.

The words which form our caption long ago passed into a sort of proverb, and even now are frequently uttered wherever a mysterious murder is committed and the detectives have not succeeded in hunting up the guilty party. Some such a mysterious murder was committed a few months bygone in this city, the victim being Mr. Nathan,

To Correspondents.

D. J. K.—1. When John Brougham played "Pocahontas" in New York City and Philadelphia, Pa., on the same evening, the play was first acted in New York at 7, Mr. Brougham leaving the party took a wager for the Jersey Ferry and left Jersey City at 7.52, arriving at the Kensington depot in Philadelphia at 10 o'clock; then taking stages, they arrived at the theatre at 10.30, and when the performance commenced there at that hour. 2. A locomotive has been run in this country sixty miles in one hour. 3. The fastest authenticated time in which one mile was ever made by a running horse was 1 min. 43¼ sec. 4. The limits of the different fighting weights are as follows:—Feather, up to 112 lbs.; light, up to 133 lbs.; middle, up to 154 lbs.; heavy, all above 154 lbs.

STAKEHOLDER, Brooklyn, N. Y.—"George and Sim, at cribbage, shuffle their cards in the following order, George commencing:—3, 4, 1, 2, 1, 6, 3, 4. The points for the several sequences and fifteen are regularly taken, up to the last tray, which sequence of six George neglects to take; but Sim proceeds to take his eight points for sequence by the last four, to which George objects. How is it?"..... George made a foolish miss of it for not taking his sequence on playing the tray, and Sim was quite right in scoring his sequence of eight points for his last four.

VAN DYKE'S HOTEL.—Mitchell's Olympic was situated on the east side of Broadway, between Grand and Howard streets, upon the site of the building that afterwards became extensively known as 444, and afterwards occupied by a building called the City Assembly Rooms. It was opened by James Mitchell, December 9th, 1839. One record that we have examined says that it was destroyed by fire, November 20th, 1854, while another states it was torn down May 23d, 1858.

A REGULAR SUBSCRIBER, Toronto.—A man can be arrested in Canada, for embezzlement (if not committed in England, by bench warrant, the same as if he was in that country, as Canada is a part of the British domain. If he were resident in the United States, however, his arrest would be subject to the rulings of the extradition treaty.

RIVELL'S OYSTER BAY, Philadelphia, Pa.—The party who bets that the stage of the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, Pa., contains a larger area in square feet than the stage of Niblo's Garden, New York city, wins; the area of the Academy stage bing 6,570 square feet, and Niblo's Garden a little less than 4,875.

BILLY SHEDMAN.—Your proper method is to issue a challenge, sending a deposit with it, and if it is not taken up in a reasonable time, some one else, the terms being reasonable, you can claim the title. Russell is not a professional and will not swing for money, consequently he cannot be considered champion.

J. W. S., Charleston, S. C.—We cannot tell you where he was born. He has been in the minstrel business some years, and made his first appearance on the dramatic stage, at the Bowery Theatre, N. Y. city, Feb. 13th, last, in a drama written expressly for him, entitled "Pomp."

A. M. L.—The Richmond Hill Theatre, corner of Charlton and Varick streets, was opened Nov. 7th, 1831, by Richard Russell, was transformed into an amphitheatre and opened as such with an equestrian company in Oct. 1833. About 1847 the building was torn down.

C. B. H., Albany.—1. The articles expressly stated that they were to fight in Ireland. 2. Mace did go to Ireland, but returned to England the night prior to the day appointed for the fight. Coburn was in the ring. 3. The stakes were drawn, but Coburn received $100 for expenses. 4. Coburn.

BEHRWING.—1. The first prize in the annual regatta of the New York Yacht Club last season was won by the Idler. On August 14th the Cambria won a cup offered by the N. Y. C. to the schooner which should arrive second at the time of the race for the Ashbury cups.

PELICAN, New Orleans.—Of course the captain can have all his men in the field or all in the out-field, with two in the infield, if he chooses. The field comprises nine men, placed where the captain thinks they can be most effective in pulling their adversaries out.

J. M., Newark, N. J.—Butt Riley and Johnny Dwyer did have a rough-and-tumble a few days ago, in a saloon on Houston street, this city, ending in about an even thing. Neither party has issued a challenge since.

CHAMPS, McKenzie, Tenn.—1. When a player assists his partner cannot play it alone. 2. The cards must be played over correctly, and if the lone hand scores every trick he is entitled to four points; if not, he scores two points for his opponent's revoke.

RAILROAD, New Orleans.—8, having made high and low with but two points to go, went out first. J.'s Jack, with but one to go, did not help him, as the points for high, low, are taken before the one of Jack, unless it is turned up.

C. R., Springfield, Mass.—1. The cost of dramatizing a novel would depend upon the amount of labor bestowed upon it. 2. F. G. Maclear of J. McCloskey might do it. 3. The author's consent is not necessary. 4. We know of no theatre where they take pupils.

A READER, Rock Fall.—1. There are no general rules in existence for the government of the game in this country; each club makes its own rules. 2. John Howard made the longest running jump on record, viz.:—29 feet 7 inches, at Chester, Eng.

VOUCHER.—A. wins the bet, for he produced the bills of lading in which there was a difference of 40 cents per barrel, and his wager was that he could prove his assertion by the production of the bills of lading to that effect.

PIETY HALL, Helena, Ark.—1. Judge Curtis ran an even mile in the fastest time on record in this country, viz.:—1:43¾. 2. Next to Dexter's 2:17¾, Lady Thorn's 2:18¾ is the fastest mile beat in trotting.

T. L. S., Williamsburgh, L. I.—An euchre counts two points in the regular game. The game you mention is a ridiculous innovation, and the writers are not governed by any published rules, and it must have an agreement among yourselves before commencing to play.

FAITHFUL READER, Leavenworth, Kansas.—1. His portrait never appeared in the CLIPPER, though a biographical sketch was published. 2. We have a correspondent in your city. Thank you for the offer.

SPOONER, Williamsburgh.—The rule of the house governs the wager in the case in point, but it is always advisable to have the point settled as to the relative values of the hand before commencing the game, and thus avoid disputes.

J. C. F. R., Port Reynolds.—1. They don't make any reduction. On the contrary, they object to selling to speculators. 2. In 10 or 10½ seconds. We cannot refer you to anybody. 3. Plenty of them. Price from $1 upwards, according to size, etc. 4. No.

HUMPHREYS, Lon.—Your cards are decidedly ballooning in your queries. Read the CLIPPER and you will not need to ask such questions. 1. No one knows—not even themselves. 2. Send to Harry Wright, who will tell you. 3. See next week's CLIPPER.

ARTHUR, Worcester.—1. He never lifted the weight named. 2. Ourtis is said to have lifted 3,300 lbs. 3. D's hand is foul, and he remains out, while the others play their hands as dealt.

SWEDE, Helena, Ark.—A mile heat race is best two in three; never a single dash. Sometimes are races of mile heats, best three in five, but these require to be specially expressed.

TUCKER.—1. The races alluded to were with the Sappho. 2. The Sappho was defeated in a race around the Isle of Wight, Eng., in Aug. 1868; she unfortunately lost important spars and sails.

CONSTANT READER, Matteawan.—The Brooklyn and Coney Island horse car line is much longer than the Third Avenue road, and the largest in this city.

X. Y. Z., Hanover, N. H.—The rule varies in different localities; in some three of a kind beat a straight, and in others the reverse. The point must be settled before commencing to play.

R. B. G. W., Philadelphia.—The two 40's take the two prizes; 39 had no claim.

WM. W.—1. Nat Langham was alive at last advices. 2. He fought eight times in the ring. 3. Several claim it, but Napper is the one best entitled thereto.

OXFORD, Boston.—Spotting the deep red ball when the cue ball is in hand and all the rest in the string, is not according to rule, although it is frequently done by amateurs by mutual agreement.

R. B., Lexington, Ky.—The last race ever rowed for the championship of the Thames took place Nov. 22d, 1866, between the late R. Chambers and J. H. Sadler.

MURPHY, Baltimore, Md.—George M. Kelly, the champion vaulter of the world, leaped over seventeen horses at Corinth, Miss., Aug. 8th, 1868.

W. A. L.—A solution of bismuth in rose water is the best, or prepared chalk, which can be had at any drug store, may be used to whiten the face of clowns in pantomimes.

G. P.—The stock of that combination is now selling as high as 118 to 119, which is far above par. United States securities are to be preferred, in our opinion.

C. H.—1. Mrs. George C. Boniface and Miss Kate Newton are sisters. 2. Miss Rose Eytinge is in Egypt. 3. Never having seen the lady we cannot say.

REUTER, Watertown, N. Y.—"The Vagabonds" is by Trowbridge. Send to F. C. Weymss, No. 726 Broadway, and he will send you a book containing it.

NEWTON PHILIPS.—The City of Paris virtually surrendered when the forts were occupied. It was simply a clause in the terms of capitulation which prevented the city from being occupied.

INQUIRER, Trinidad, Cal.—1. A bet cannot be declared off except by mutual consent. 2. Your subscription expires on No. 8 of the present volume.

BUFFALO BILL.—1. A common sack, holding two or three bushels, and filled with whatever substance you may think proper, will answer the purposes. 2. Mace's bag isn't as large as you suppose.

JAMES G.—You are wrong, as the middle-weight limit is 154lbs., not 140lbs.; light-weight runs up to 133lbs. If you want to make a match with him, as you say, put up some money to prove it.

CLIPPER READER, Peoria City, Ill.—We think the Heathwoods the best. You can obtain them perfectly genuine of Ed. James, 88 Centre street, New York.

READER, Indianapolis.—1. We approve of the practice of breeding from a well tried cock. 2. Breed from a stag and old hens, or from pullets and an old cock.

ENQUIRER, Philadelphia.—The Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York, was opened August 23d, 1859; the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, in the following January.

PIETY HILL, Helena, Ark.—1. Gen. W. G. Harding, Belle Meade, Nashville, Tenn. 2. Judge Curtis ran a mile dash when he made 1:43¾.

C. E. T.—"At cribbage, the cards being played in the following order—4, 3, 1, 5—is A correct in claiming three points for a sequence on playing the last tray?"..... Yes.

N. F., Sunbury, Pa.—She ostensibly belongs to Dan Mace, and did so at the time of her encounter at Rochester. Who is her actual, than fair owner, we are unable to say.

W. H. C.—1. They were beaten only by the Atlantics, by a score of 8 to 7, in their first tour, and by the Atlantics again, on their second tour, by 11 to 7. 2. They had a dress of their own.

C. H., Worcester, Mass.—Kennedy played F. C. Hawkes in Williamsburg, L. I., and at Bridgeport, Ct., losing both matches, his average in the first being nearly 14.

F. K., Baltimore, Md.—All your questions are concerning the private affairs of a professional lady, which we never answer.

PATSY O'HARA.—You must send on a deposit if you wish your challenge inserted.

J. M., Trenton.—We can neither decipher your writing nor your meaning

NEMES, New York.—B, having thrown his hand up, forfeits his claim to the money.

CLIPPER TABER.—1. There are no rules relating to "log rolling."

B. No

DON'T KNOW.—Yes, and in other ways also. Not necessary to particularize.

LONE STAR, Galveston, Texas.—Please mail your letters so as to reach here on Saturdays, as we go to press on Monday night.

SAILOR, Quincy, Ill.—We do not know that any one bearing that name was connected with the department.

NORTH WEST, Auburn, Ind.—Your fowl has got the roup, and you had better kill him before all your stock is infected.

K. K. K., Kansas City.—Sixes beat aces at poker dice; the former is the highest denomination that can be thrown.

S. A. L., Tippecanoe City.—The CLIPPER is the only paper of the kind you mention.

M. M.—Ex White, who kept the Dexter House on Broome street, near Broadway, died in this city, Oct. 8th, 1858, aged 48.

W. McC., Bangor.—Tim Collins arrived in this country in Nov., 1868.

H. C. C., Richmond.—Send to Ed. James, 88 and 90 Centre street, this city, enclosing $3 for "Physical Exercises."

"YOUNG AMERICA."—We had an article on the same subject some time ago.

FRANK FOSTER, St. Louis.—He cannot go alone when ordered up by any player.

ADD, Scranton, Pa.—The largest stake ever fought for was $10,000 a side, by Hyer and Sullivan.

BILL, playing alone, has no right to demand his partner's best card, or, indeed, any other.

FRITZ, Utica, N. Y.—We do not require a correspondent in your town.

KATE, Philadelphia, Pa.—A letter addressed in care of this office will reach him.

RICHARD, Washington, D. C.—We believe that the lady never appeared with the Lydia Thompson troupe.

OCTOROON, Boston, Mass.—1. Cannot say. 2. The Webb Sisters are both married and have retired from the stage.

A. A. R.—1. McVey. 2. A fine supporting team for Martin. 3. He is in the Eckfords, and therefore the query is useless.

DAUNTLESS, B. B. C., Chelsea, Mass.—The dealer cannot score Jack, in consequence of the misdeal.

A. F. R., Allegheny City.—1. The deuce is the lowest. 2. It is B's deal.

A. and R., Boston.—The landlord's claim holds good after the tenants are warned out.

PEDESTRIAN, Richmond.—Our opinion on this question was given in a recent issue, to which we refer you.

MICH. AVE. B., Chicago.—All bets are to be paid as the battle proceeds after a fight is awarded.

C. H. E., Chicago.—He was confined in the Suffolk County Jail, Boston, Mass.

SYRACUSE, Syracuse.—Thank you; we shall probably make use of them.

RANGE.—"To-morrow is," may be admissible on account of general usage, but grammatically it is incorrect.

J. K. L., Lebanon, O.—1. We do not know. 2. The same as any other office.

F. S. W., Montgomery, Ala.—St. Louis has a larger population than Chicago.

TELEGRAPH OPERATOR, Fort Wayne, Ind.—The firm has always acted straightforwardly with us.

M. VAN S., Marshall, Texas.—1. There are several firms. 2. Yes. S. T., Seneca Falls.—Jack is the highest card in the euchre pack.

G. R. M., New Haven.—Our opinion is that the wager stands.

SIXTEENTH WARDER, Baltimore, Md.—She is 35 years of age.

W. F., Monktown, Ont.—The ground has not been selected.

RAFFLE.—The man losing on the tie takes the second prize.

SHOREDITCH.—1. A long, steady stroke. 2. Sherry, if any.

B. C. D.—The player straddling the blind has the last say.

LUKE, Brooklyn.—Three deuces beat three aces in raffles.

JOHNNY D.—B. wins with his three fours, six and tray.

BATH, New Utrecht, L. I.—You did not name the plays.

ASS, Greenfield, Mass.—The feathers around the neck.

R. B. F., Pittsburgh.—We have a correspondent there.

D. T. L., Philadelphia.—See answer to "Buffalo Bill."

J. M. THATCHER.—Letters forwarded to destination.

STEAMBOAT, Cairo, Ill.—The non-dealer takes it.

J. M., Brooklyn, N. Y.—He is an Irishman.

A. D. F., Hubbard, O.—State the distance.

JOHN RYAN, St. Louis.—Not much.

C. S. B.—Their route is a secret.

W. H. S.—Received. Thank you.

ACTIVE.—By a neglected rupture.

A. H.—Received, and accepted.

VIC.—No, they did not.

THEATRICAL FEATURES OF THE WEEK.

Melpomene and Thalia—Links Between Two Generations of Actors and Playgoers.

We write a little in advance of two performances, respectively at Niblo's and the Fifth Avenue Theatre, which will have transpired only a few hours prior to the publication of the current issue of the CLIPPER. These same performances are noteworthy in an eminent degree, and though they are of very different kinds, dramatically considered, they are alike in the features that recommend them to our notice—those features being the connecting links they present between the stage as it was and the stage as it is—the actors that have had their day and the actors yet among us.

At Niblo's, the feature, as we need scarcely say, is the production of the tragedy of "King Richard the III," nearly as Shakespeare wrote it—a composition differing immensely from the drama—Colley Cibber's version—we have been accustomed to witness, and in which most tragedians of eminence, both here and in England, have sought to show off their abilities to the best advantage. Of these, it is somewhat curious to observe that the three Richards pre-eminent in the records, here and in England, were much alike, namely:—George Frederick Cooke, Edmund Kean, and the elder Junius Brutus Booth—equally curious to observe that in style of performance as well as in the costuming of the part in question, these gentlemen showed a strong likeness, too. The portrayal of each was of the intensely vehement sort, and his dressing the conventional slashings and gold embroidery, the whole constituting an order of apparel more picturesque than correct, insomuch as while it took the fancy of the audiences of those days, it was what mortal man in real life never donned. The actors we have named belonged to what must now be called the "Old School;" the gentleman who is to enact Richard at Niblo's is, however, connected with the "New," and coming before us as he does, he not only serves as the link between two generations of actors, but also between two generations of performances—taking the principal share in showing us how differently Shakespeare wrote his great play from what it has been corrupted to by adaptors.

At the Fifth Avenue Theatre, and in a specialty different from the tragic, an eminent comedian, who has been before the lamps nearly fifty years, and who, according to the report of capable critics, retains up to his sixty-eighth year all the talent and buoyancy of his youth, comes for the third time before us. We allude to Mr. Charles Mathews, in whom we own the worthy successor of a father who earned a considerable portion of his repute here, in the United States of America. Perhaps, in point of real interest, the present advent of Mr. Mathews in New York is more significant than even the Shakespearean revival, or, more properly speaking, purification, at Niblo's. Close on fifty years ago the elder Charles Mathews visited this country, for the purpose of giving his famous table entertainments, and the potent influence he exercised over the risible faculties of the folks of those days calls for no ghost from the grave to bear witness to the fact. In later years the second Charles Mathews came to us, accompanied by the celebrated Madame Vestris, to whom he had just been married. They performed at the Park Theatre in this city, for a short time only, and in taking leave of his audience Mr. Mathews made a long speech, in which he dwelt on the causes that had induced his and his wife's departure (circumstances too trite for particularization here), and finished all by bidding the people he addressed "farewell forever."

Yet, about eighteen years afterwards, Mr. Mathews was with us once again—then newly widowed and at the ripe age of fifty-five—but little altered from the man he was when he made his metropolitan debut at the Olympic Theatre, in London, in 1835. This second visit of Mr. Charles Mathews to the United States was rendered memorable by an occurence apart from the theatre (the Metropolitan, then under the management of poor Burton) at which he was engaged—his marriage with Lizzie Weston Davenport. This affair was a "nine days' wonder," but we believe we are only stating the truth when we record our impression, derived from a reliable source, that this marriage eventuated to the happiness of both parties immediately concerned.

Since 1857 Mr. Mathews has led a busy life—now in England, anon in Australia, and again in America. As we have said before, competent critics have reported the actor to be little changed, if changed at all, from what he was many years ago. The truth or falsity of this, however, it will be for us to show in the next issue of the CLIPPER. Meanwhile, it cannot be questioned that a very hearty welcome awaits the English actor on the occasion of his third visit to these shores. There are not many living who have a recollection of his father; while the playgoers who have any cognizance at all of the elder Kean and Booth are also few; fewer still those whose memory stretches back to the days of Cooke. These circumstances, however, lend an unusual interest to the theatrical proceedings of the current week in New York, where we are invited to the illustration of the muses, Melpomene and Thalia; to view Shakespeare in his correct form (conjoined with all the "properties"), and to recognize the link that binds us, the living, to those who have already "strutted their brief hour upon the stage" of human life and of the theatre.

THE LIFE OF AN ACTOR.

It is a common thing for those who addict themselves to the more hackneyed pursuits, and especially those whose lines have not always been cast in pleasant places, to look upon actors as a restless, careless set, whose task at the worst is but that of the schoolboy and parrot; who, but for the lessons set them by their superiors, would be dumb and useless. Also (and this is especially the favorite idea with the junior branches) that, for accepted professionals, the stage is one extended clover pasture; that for its votaries life is an almost uninterrupted series of triumphs and its pathways are strewn with roses that never fade. To be sure they will admit that there are a few hapless ones who do not share these enviable distinctions, but that is an additional reason why they should persevere. Only by sad experience is the bitter lesson to be learned, and the truth reluctantly forced from us; the paths to success are thickly bordered with thorns, and when the loftiest round is attained it is found that the aspiring climber has but surmounted the dividing barrier of a fresh sea of troubles—that life's perplexities, in fact, have but just begun. Those at all familiar with the "inner life" of the theatrical world need not be told of the interminable bickerings, jealousies and heart burnings which checker the brilliant career of the popular vocalist—especially if a prima donna of the opera; but outsiders little dream of the annoyances through which success has been attained, or dream that the throwing of a single boquet may cause a strife behind the scenes in the bosoms of fair recipients, which may destroy the prospects of one or two vocalists and even ruin the fortunes of a manager—the innocent public all the while regarding the pompous and well fed impressario as a second Cœsus, gifted with powers that, in his contracted sphere, almost vie with those of the autocrat of the Russias. We have even heard them commiserating Max Maretzek, as though he had been the first example in kind; whereas, he but brings up the rear of a long list of illustrious predecessors. And the favorite of the hour, at whose feet the dilletante of the world are laying their offerings, may be forgotten to-morrow. "But," it is argued, "the queen of the opera or the ballet often marries a nobleman at the end." Yes, it must be added, and is obliged to support him, too. Lumley, who in England introduced Pasta, Taglioni, Malibran and Elsler to the public, in a book of memoirs exposes the miseries, the squabbles, wranglings and almost fights, which constantly interrupted the peace of his realms, and for all the years of his arduous management virtually placed success beyond his reach—not to speak of the reputations which were demolished, and the enormous losses that accrued in the course of years. The lyric stage, although most frequently alluded to, does not, however, monopolize the honors in this respect. There is not a hero of the drama who has not his allotment of grievances to narrate to you, and who will not frankly confess that, had he anticipated at the outset the flood of difficulties through which he must wade to his triumphs and afterwards sustain them, he would have chosen any other sphere. We see the great actor, Hercules Lambrakis, irradiating the stage in some sensational part, which he has made so exclusively his own that the author is never thought of; the observed of all observers, the idol of the public, who rain down applause upon him and are untiring in their homage; and well may we envy him that dream of triumph, for no one knows better than himself that in the hours of ease the dear public will exact additional pay for their favors by a species of social ostracism, and that, though his character may be purity itself, he will find opposed to him a barrier which does not exist for the unprincipled and heartless speculator, the rake, or the roue. After devoting years to the study of a single part and winning golden opinions therefrom, from all sorts of men, his sensibilities are apt to be roused by a wanton attack from some callow critic, who, for fancied reason, or perhaps for no reason at all, deliberately proceeds to demolish the reputation which it has taken a lifetime to build up. All the while conscious that superiority in anyone involves a monopoly of the most absolute kind—at least in the districts to which he is best known—he is constantly annoyed by the knowledge that, privately, others are decrying his efforts and endeavoring to pull him down. From friendships—in the ordinary acceptation of the word, as from what is known as "society"—he is cut off, and even the attainment of wealth brings no healing balm in its train, as he had fondly expected. To all, the greatest rewards are achieved by the severest drudgery only, and nature must have bestowed upon the aspirant the magic talisman, or his labor will, after all, be fruitless and vain. While confessedly in diverse respects a public benefactor and an ornament to society, he is continually made to feel the stings of its injustice, and what wonder that, after all, he rebukes and burlesques it?

WONDERS OF THE SHOW WORLD.—We recently published a series of engravings of human monstrosities copied from a medical work in the New York University, which created quite an interest, and many articles have been written on the subject of these marvels of nature. In the pre liminary examination of a man named Dr. Landis, in Philadelphia, (last week) charged with selling an obscene book, which Landis calls a medical work, the counsel for the latter produced a copy of the CLIPPER containing the series of medical engravings referred to, and stated that the paper was sold without interference; but as the engravings were taken from a standard medical authority, the judge very properly refused to entertain this sort of evidence, and Landis was held to answer. Since the publication of our human monstrosities we have received many letters on the subject, some of them enclosing photographs recently taken from life, one of the double child recently referred to in the CLIPPER, and another of a monster infant born out west a few weeks since, both remarkable freaks of nature. We may publish these at a future day.

WAR IN THE COAL MINES.—Pennsylvania is fast gaining a world-wide reputation for internecine warfare. Some years ago it got up a whiskey war, and that, too, at a time when whiskey was not in such demand as at present. It also inaugurated a series of battles between native Americans and parties of foreign birth. Now it is enjoying itself in an unpleasantness between the coal miners and the military authorities. The "rioters," as they are called in the papers, wished to form a coal-tion with the peaceful workmen, so as to stop operations at the mines, but the latter did not fancy any such coal-lusion, and the end threatens to be a coal-lision with the military, who have invaded the infected district in large numbers. We fear that the miners are building a hotter fire than they anticipated when they commenced to work this last claim. We much fear that the leading spirits in the mining war are men who seek to under-mine the best interests of the miners.

CLEVER LITTLE GAME.—Those "merchants' and manufacturers" who were "in" with the lottery scheme on Broadway were no doubt quite willing to sell out "cheap for cash" after Captain Welsh and his police made a raid on the place on the 4th inst. Although we were assured, on police authority, that the tickets in the wheel had been examined and all were found to be blanks, we are now told, after time has been given to "fix" things, that tickets for all the prizes named in the schedule were found in the wheel, which the same some one should rise to explain. The people of this city will exhibit a good deal of verdancy should they be induced to take another hand in this speculation.

THE GERMAN PEACE CELEBRATION.—The Sons of Faderland, on the 10th inst., made a grand holiday of Easter Monday by a celebration in honor of the victorious Prussians, consisting of one of the most imposing military and civic demonstrations ever witnessed in this country, for the enthusiasm with which our Teutonic friends enter into the spirit of such displays is proverbial. It was a complete success, genial Old Sol added brilliancy to the scene, and the festivities of the day were brought to a fitting termination by frightful onslaughts upon oceans of refreshing lager and acres of Limburger cheese and other sweet-scented German provender.

"THE HEATHEN CHINEE" MAN.—Now that Bret Harte has come into such prominence as a writer, it may not be out of place to remark that the CLIPPER was the very first paper in the east to copy his articles from the Overland Monthly, and thus recognize his genius and help to extend his popularity. It was some two years ago that we published his sketches "The Luck of Roaring Camp," "The Outcast of Poker Flat," "Miggles," etc., which afterwards ran through the press of the country, in most cases copied from the CLIPPER, as the Overland was but little known in the east at that time.

WE ENTER our solemn protest against the proposed leveling of the streets in our neighborhood. We don't mind the grade being changed a foot or two, but when it comes to anything above that, "we object," as our worthy legislators would say. The proposed scheme is not so much intended to fill up low ground as it is to fill up the pockets of those "in the ring." Our representatives had better "pause in their wild career" before an outraged community shall rise in their might, and haul from power those who would lay us under this additional burden, and so forth.

THE UNTIMELY WARM WEATHER of the past few days set the sporters in high glee, base ballists especially being excessively jubilant. But one swallow does not make a summer, any more than one swallow of Burton makes a toper satisfied, though what connection there is between the two we cannot say. We are not surprised, however, that the same genial warmth which has begun to expand the buds and blossoms on the trees should also expand the desire for out-door recreation on the part of "Young America."

DOG EAT DOG.—The hungry Parisians having eaten their horses, dogs, cats and other domestic game, are now engaged in the pleasing duty of consuming each other. By the time this communist riot is over, there will be very little left of the once gay metropolis. "Where are the police?" that they do not stop this sanguinary war.

COOL.—A Philadelphia paper, the specialty of which is gossip, a few days since contained this important announcement:—"The doctor and Charlie look handsome in their new neck ties." The rest of their toggery was probably discarded on account of the recent hot spell.

NEWS OF THE WEEK BOILED DOWN.

 The "Merchants and Manufacturers' Co-operative Distribution" of $250,000, a nice little lottery job, was broken up by the police on April 4th, and the principals were held to answer, but after a subsequent official investigation the drawing was allowed to proceed.

THE RING.

THE HEAVY-WEIGHT CHTMPIONSHIP.

Finer weather than that with which we were favored during the week just closed could not be wished for by the most discontented of mortals, and that it was appreciated by those arenic heroes, Joe Coburn and Jim Mace, now matched for the championship of America and two thousand dollars, was evident from the manner in which they courted the bright skies and balmy breezes, and the zest with which they pursued their course of work, out of doors and in, all of which has, of course, exercised a most beneficial effect upon their physique, improving their health and knitting more firmly together the muscles and sinews which cover their limbs and bodies, swelling into knots here and there beneath the tightly-drawn, sun-embrowned skin. From this time henceforward it behooves both men to pay strict and constant attention to the business of training, as but a little over three weeks will elapse from the date of our present issue ere the time rolls around for them to settle up, and both of them will require all of that time to secure perfect condition. Joe varied the monotony of everyday work by taking a run up to Albany on the 7th inst., showing there on the evening of that and the succeeding day and returning to the Observatory Hotel in good season to welcome his patrons on Easter Sunday, who, by the way, were by no means few in number, the exceedingly charming weather having caused a more than usually large exodus from the metropolis proper. We believe Mace intends to remain at his house on 23d street up to the hour of leaving for the scene of battle, which, to our way of thinking, is very bad policy, as the heart of a large city like this, and particularly a public house, is not exactly the spot for the headquarters of a pugilist while in training, especially for so important an encounter as this.

The meeting for the appointment of representatives to select the place of fighting is to be held at this office on Monday afternoon, April 24th, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock. Mace gave an exhibition at Paterson, N. J., on the evening of Monday, April 3d, which was well attended. Among the celebrities who set-to were Jim and Pooley Mace, Geo. Rooke and Jack Smith, Harris and Jim Coyne, Kerrigan and Harris, Arthur Chambers and another.

Since the foregoing was penned, we received a visit from Mace and Jim Cusick, his trainer, who had managed, after much trouble and vexation of spirit, in elbowing their way through the sweltering masses of humanity, viewing the Teutonic celebration. He looks well, though the absence of the nobby moustache, which is wont to adorn his upper lip, "when on his oars," alters his personal appearance greatly. He requests us to state that he desires to increase the amount of the stakes, as he considers $1,000 a side too paltry a sum for men of the reputation possessed by he and Coburn to fight for, and if Joe is willing he will be prepared to make the increase at the meeting on the 24th inst. Mace has had a number of colors printed in this city, and they were very handsome they are, too. A full description appeared in a recent issue, and parties desiring them can obtain them by calling upon or addressing James Mace, 69 West Twenty-third street, or of Ed. James, care of this office; the price is $5 each.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF LIGHT-WEIGHTS.

"All serene" is the word in the match for the title of light-weight champion and $2,000 between those hard-hitting and scientific young boxers, Billy Edwards and Tim Collins. Neither has commenced active training yet, though the latter has, ever since the match was entered into, been doing a good amount of work daily, and has already decreased his weight several pounds, besides getting the "hard stuff" out of his "corporosity," thus laying a good foundation upon which to build up the system. He will shortly go into training quarters, and, under the eye of an experienced mentor, work assiduously to secure perfect physical fitness. He was the recipient of a benefit at Turner's Hall, Haverhill street, Boston, on Thursday, April 6th, which, as Tim is well liked at the Hub, drew an excellent audience and was marked by fine sparring. The wind-up was between Collins and Patsy O'Hara. Edwards has altered the date of his proposed exhibition from the 11th to the evening of Saturday, 15th instant, the Casino, corner of East Houston and Mott streets, having been engaged for the purpose. This hall is one of the best, if not the best, adapted for the purpose in the metropolis, being commodious, centrally located, well lighted and ventilated and excellently arranged. It is the intention to have a good sized stage, roped and staked, erected in the centre of the hall, so that all will have an excellent opportunity of seeing the several things of the manly art which will occur between first-class men, heavy, light and feather-weight, during the evening. The feature of the occasion will be an encounter between the beneficiary and the newly-arrived Britisher, Arthur Chambers, which promises to be just red-hot, and will tend to show what sort of metal the latter is made of. The proceeds of the entertainment (which will also embrace wrestling, singing, dancing, etc.) will go to defray the expenses incurred in training, and we trust he'll have a bumper. He proposes commencing preparatory work at Cypress Hill Grove, L. I., on the 17th inst., under the care of Harris. The next deposit, $250 from each, must be posted at Reddy's saloon, 614½ Broadway, on the evening of Monday, April 17th, between the hours of 8 and 10 o'clock.

OLD BILL TOVEE'S EXHIBITION.

For the first time in a number of years, the ancient warrior, Old Bill Tovee, had a real benefit on the night of Tuesday, April 4th. The place chosen for the entertainment was Clark's Arbor Hall, West Houston street, which was literally packed to overflowing by those who desired to show their friendship for "the old man" and at the same time enjoy the feast of boxing, etc., prepared for the occasion. We were gratified to see such a turnout, for, aside from the beneficiary's faithfulness, his straightforward conduct during his long career before the public, as a pugilist, pedestrian and master of ceremonies, entitled him to a rouser. It was a very quiet, gentlemanly gathering, too, the rough element not being present in such numbers as usual. Uncle Bill Tovee took tickets and money at the door himself, assisted by his old side-partner and off-opponent, Jack Adams, and they were kept as busy as bees, while the ancient warrior's face was wreathed in smiles, so great was the contrast in attendance to that which he was wont to see at benefits previously taken. A feature of the entertainmennt was the offer of a set of boxing-gloves to the best light-weight sparrer—Con Foley, Mike Coburn and another officiating as judges. They were unable to decide who was best entitled to them, however, and it was finally decided that Tovee should retain them, much against his will, as he said they were there to be given away, and he would prefer that the original intention be carried out. The boxing was between light-weights altogether, and embraced very good sets-to. The sparrers were Young Edwards and Jimmy Grady, Mike Coburn and Hen Bagley, Andy Hanley and Jack Madden, Pete McGinniss and Patsey Hogan, Sliey and Malone. None were more, if nearly as much, disappointed as Uncle Bill, because Dad Blake, Jack Williams or "Vauxhall Joe" did not show up, as he desired particularly to have a try with one or other, or all three of them, confident that he could "warm" the whole lot, one after the other, and that, too, in short order. The old gentleman was dreadfully put out about it, and gave vent to his feelings in a lengthy and well worded speech, which was attentively listened to and applauded to the echo. He apologized for the disappointment, but declared that it was no fault of his, as every one could see, for he was fully prepared for the fray and was anxious for it. He wound up by returning his sincere thanks to all present, sparrers and spectators alike, for their attendance, and then, arrayed in regular fighting rig, threw himself into an easy attitude before Sweeny for the wind-up. This was a very neat bout, and the suppleness and skill exhibited by the veteran surprised everybody. When in his prime Tovee could hit "like a horse kicking," and any one who comes in the way of his "auctioneer" even now, at three score years and ten, will get "rats," you be'. It is evident that the trio above mentioned have a wholesome dread of its effectiveness. The spectators bestowed frequent and deserved applause during the progress of the set-to, and at its close made the welkin ring. "Mr. Sampson" had a stone broken on his breast during the evening also.

TROUBLE AMONG THE SPORTS.

Considerable of a breeze was occasioned in sporting circles of the metropolis on the 7th inst. by the published particulars of the arrest of Bill Clark, of the "Arbour," and Phil. Hargrave, of the "Capitol," upon the charge of lightening the pockets of George Hill, alias "Cooley Keyes," to the tune of $5,000. The circumstances connected with the affair are, as we have learned them, as follows:—

Keyes, Hargrave, Clark, and several others not so well known, were out together upon a little jollification on the day previous, making the round of the leading sporting houses and late in the afternoon brought up at a maison de joie, presided over by Lizzie Rice at 134 West Twenty-sixth street, where a few more rounds of exhilarating cordials had the effect of "laying out" several of the party, among them Cooley, who stretched out upon a sofa and was soon in the land of oblivion. Clark soon afterwards left for home, while Phil. remained, as we believe, did the rest of the party. Keyes had been asleep some hours, when, believing that he had a large amount of money upon his person, and being afraid that, where strangers were continually passing in and out, he might be robbed, Hargrave, at the suggestion of the Madam, examined his pockets, and, drawing forth what money they contained, threw it into her lap. Upon counting it over less than $2.0 was found to be the total. Convinced that Cooley had a much larger sum than that when he entered the house, Hargrave woke him up and told him to "go through" himself. Upon placing his hand in the inside pocket of his vest, and discovering it to be empty, he seized Phil. by the collar, with the remark, "Give me back my money," charging him with having robbed him of $5,000. Hargrave denied the charge most emphatically, and Keyes, upon being informed that Clark had left some time previously, said said that if Phil. did not have it, Bill had taken it with him. He procured the services of an officer and had both parties arrested. They were taken before Justice Shandley, of Jefferson Market, who took the complaint lodged by Keyes and locked them up for examination. Efforts were made on the 10th, however, they were released, Harry Hill, Geo. McKay, Joe Wilson and several others becoming sureties in the required amount. The fact of five one hundred dollar bills having been found upon Hargrave when arrested has been taken by some of the dailies as conclusive evidence that he is guilty of the charge, but it is difficult to conceive how this could have any bearing upon the case, as he is reputed to be a man of considerable means, and is probably seldom without that amount. He states himself that he intended paying a bill amounting to between $400 and $500 which fell due that day, and had taken this sum with him for that purpose. Those who know Clark and Hargrave are surprised to learn of this accusation and are confident that they are guiltless. We are requested by them to return their thanks to those who have rallied around them and given such unmistakable evidence of their friendship.

MIKE COBURN'S EXHIBITION.—Mike Coburn took a benefit at Continental Hall, Eighth avenue and 34th street, on the evening of the 8th inst., and had a first rate house. It had originally been given out that a glove match would take place on the occasion between Coburn and Geo. Seddons, with blacked gloves, but for some reason—by request of the latter, we believe—this was given up, although it was understood that they were to spar together anyhow. When the time came, however, Seddons failed to show up, much to Mike's regret, for he was anxious to have a shake-up with George. The excuse given was that he was unwell, which may have been so, but if so he ought to have gone to the hall anyhow—he could just as well have done that as make the round of other places. The general impression was that he was sick of the job he had undertaken. However Saunders took his place and he and Mickey made a stashing set-to. The other bouts were between Madden and Siler, Hen Bagley and Young Edwards, Harry Hicken and Dooney Harris, Sheridan and the Hoboken Clipper, Billy McMullin and Billy Edwards, all of them tip-top displays and worthy of a description, but our crowded columns won't admit of it.

GEORGE ROOKE'S challenge has not as yet been responded to. Where are all the eligible middle-weig ts, and why don't some of them pick up the gauntlet thus boldly thrown down?

GROGAN denies that he had any ribs broken in his late fight wi h Hyde, whom he has challenged to fight again for $1,000 a side, $250 forfeit.

"CUTTING" JOHN PRICE, of Baltimore, is reported to have recently been converted to religion.

WE HAVE LETTERS for Joe Coburn, John Mulholland and James Shaw.

THE LATE FIGHT NEAR NEW ORLEANS.—A correspondent sends us the following concerning the fight which took place near New Orleans on the 2d inst., between Mike Hyde and John Grogan, the result of which was given last week:—

Late on Saturday night, 1st inst., word was given to the fraternity to meet at the foot of Girod street, at 9 o'clock on Sunday morning, and upon arriving at the spot the tug Nellie, with a large barge in tow, was discovered. On arriving at the grain elevator, Hyde was taken on board, with his seconds, and at Carrollton a large re-enforcement, with the other contestant, Grogan. A quick run brought all to the Kennedy Plant, about 13 miles up the Mississippi river, on the right bank. The stakes and ropes were quickly put in position on a beautiful piece of ground. Ed. Duffy was appointed referee, and Jimmy Flynn, time-keeper. Pat McGinn umpired for Grogan, and Steve O'Donnell for Hyde. Grogan was seconded by Jim Burns and Johnny Regan, and Hyde by Hughey Ford and Jim Donnelly. Duffy made a speech, announcing that fair play would be the rule, and "may the best man win." The men shook hands and time was called at 1.45. They fought 133 rounds, when Grogan walked up to his corner and coolly threw up the sponge at 3.40; time of the fight, 1 hour and 55 minutes. Grogan had, it is said, one rib broken and was unable to close his right hand from swelling so much. Hyde showed bad punishment, but otherwise was not much injured. The party returned to the city at 4.30.

ARTHUR CHAMBERS AND GEORGE SEDDONS.—Considering the amount of talk which has taken place relative to the matter, as likewise the previously expressed anxiety (at least pretended) of George Seddons to get on a match with anybody of his weight in the country, our readers will be surprised to hear that he has not declared his intentions in reference to the proposed match between him and the new-comer, Arthur Chambers, who, in point of weight and years, is as even a match as he could possibly find. Has the published record of the latter caused George to consider discretion the better part of valor and suddenly enabled him to discover that he has "something better to attend to than fighting," as others have done before when they thought they had put their foot in it? Seddons has talked very loudly, and as he is aware that Chambers has men here who are willing to put up for him, and that he himself is ready for a go, George ought to show cause and not take a back-seat when a customer appears. If he persists in maintaining silence he'll be the sufferer by it, sure.

CAREY AND MUMFORD.—Geo. Carey, of Hartford, called upon us on the 7th inst. to see if his offer had brought anything from Mumford, and, upon finding that it had not, left the following:—

NEW YORK, April 7, 1871.

HENRY MUMFORD.—SIR.—I find that you have not made any reply to my challenge in the CLIPPER of April 1st. I must, therefore, conclude that, after all your talk, you are a cur and never meant business. GEO. CAREY.

GEORGE ROOKE and Arthur Chambers, the newly arrived English boxers, could not secure a hall in Philadelphia for any night last week, but have engaged the Seventh Street Opera House for the night of April 14th, when in addition to the boxing a number of minstrel performers will appear, we understand. They appear at the Baltimore Opera House, Baltimore, on the 17th inst., and give a third exhibition at Coomb's Hall, Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, on the 22d inst.

JIM CUSICK, a sport, was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and be imprisoned in the Tombs for ten days, upon a charge of assault and battery, on the 8th instant. This is not the celebrated trainer and second of John C. Heenan and James Mace, as the unreliable dailies try to impress upon the minds of their readers, but a different person altogether. The "original" Jim is attending to his duties as trainer of Mace.

CON. OREM sends us a long communication, denying the statements made by Geoghegan and saying that he cannot do as Owney proposes; but if the latter will go to Utah, he (Orem) will stake two to one and make a side bet of $500 that he wins inside of forty minutes. As there is no prospect of a match we can't make room for Con's letter.

JERRY DONOVAN, of Scranton, Pa., and James Conway, who resides at the same place, have, we learn, been matched to fight at catch weight, for $250 a side, the battle to take place within one hundred miles of that place on April 24th.

BILLY MADDEN is to take a benefit at Clark's, 50 West Houston street, on Saturday evening, April 15th, upon which occasion a glove fight is announced to take place between Tom King and George Siler for a purse.

BASE BALL.

BASE BALL IN WASHINGTON.

OPENING GAME OF THE OLYMPIC CLUB.

The Olympic Club, of Washington, D. C., opened their grounds on the 6th inst. with a game between their professional and amateur nines. The grounds of the club are the same occupied by them last season, and are situated on and occupy the entire square of ground bounded by Sixteenth and Seventeenth, R and S streets, owned by Mr. George W. Riggs, the well known banker, who is a stockholder in the club. The square is 450 by 420 feet. The grounds are surrounded by a fence ten feet high. The club house is 24 by 18 feet, a grand stand 60 by 16 feet. There is a first class restaurant on the ground, so that people leaving business hours and the departments need not go home for lunch before the game, ample accommodations being made for all. There are covered seats that will accommodate 3,000 people, and uncovered seats and standing room for as many more, with space for a large number of carriages. From the top of a ninety foot pole floats their club flag, forty-four feet long, while the grand stand bears the national emblem, flanked on each side by two pennants representing the club colors. The grounds have been leveled off, re-sodded, rolled and properly drained, and the expense in fitting up this fine ground has been over $4,000. Great energy has been displayed by the club in securing a first class nine for the season, and so, when the opening game was finally announced, everybody was anxious to see what sort of an appearance the professionals would make together and what show the amateurs would have. About 1,200 persons were present and at four o'clock the game began. The two nines looked finely, the professionals in their white and blue and the amateurs in their dove colored uniforms. Both nines had been in good practice for some time and were therefore in good trim, with the exception of Mills, who was quite lame from a fall, and Brainard, who had not been well for several days. On the other side White, their first baseman, injured himself in the preliminary practice before the game, Burroughs taking his place.

THE GAME

opened with the Professionals at the bat, and though one sided in the score, was a fine one. It is true that the Professionals earned but three runs; still the errors of the Amateurs were not more frequent nor more glaring than were the errors of many first-class clubs last season, and may be attributed mainly to a nervousness incident to the occasion. The Professionals made but three errors, none of them counting against them, and all but one would have been prevented had Mills been in condition to move about his base after widely thrown balls. Brainard's pitching was regular and effective. Stearns' pitching was wild, but very hard to punish. Allison's catching was fine. Leonard, Robinson, Norton, Berthrong and Olsen were conspicuous for fine fielding. In the fifth innings Sweasy backed out for a high fly, and Berthrong backed him up just in season to take the ball which Sweasy found too high for him, he tipping it with his fingers, Sliey assisted in a double play, taking a difficult fly and cutting off Hurley before he could get back to the first. The batting was not very safe. Mills, Burroughs and Kulp led on first base hits, according to chances at the bat, as will be seen from the score.

The play of the Professionals was steady all through. From the grand stand they seemed but the parts of a machine, of which Brainard was the central or moving power, as every one moved when he moved, and to the right place. All present seemed satisfied with the game; even the Amateurs congratulated themselves on keeping the professionals' score down to twenty. Sweasy has his nine under good control, and makes a fine captain: it is evident that the whole nine is a unit in the determination to play to win every game. The opening is an auspicious one for the Olympics, and the club and its friends may well indulge in the hope of having the champion streamer floating there next season. Below we have given the score, having a column not heretofore seen—namely, "times at bat," which, in connection with first base hits, shows the superior batting of the game. By it, it will be seen that though Mills has four first base hits he is not ahead of either Burroughs or Kulp, who have but two, for Mills had six chances at the bat and Burroughs and Kulp but three. Thus, the first game reported shows the correctness of what was claimed by our correspondent in his letter to the professional convention on averages. The columns are, times at bat, first base hits, runs, put out and assisted:—

ATHLETIC vs. PICKED NINE.

On Monday, April 10th, the new grounds of the Athletic Club, located at Twenty-fifth and Jefferson streets, Philadelphia, was to have been inaugurated by a contest with a strong picked nine, composed of the following players:—Flowers, c. f.; Pratt, 3d b.; Luff, 2d b.; Wilkins, s. s.; Weaver, r. f.; Miller, c.; Bechtel, l. f.; Lovett, p.; McKenna, 1st b. Batting order of the Athletics was as follows:—Guthbert, l. f.; McBride, p.; Radcliff, s. s.; Malone, c.; Fisler, 1st b.; Reach, 2d b.; Sensenderfer, c. f.; Meyerle, 3d b.; Heubel, r. f.

KEKIONGAS, OF FT. WAYNE, IND.—The Kekionga Club is now full and below is the list of players for the season of 1871:—Robert Matthews, the remarkable Maryland Club pitcher. Lennon, c., late of Maryland Club; E. H. Bonker, p. s., late of Putnam, Troy, N. Y.; Jas. Foran, 1st b., late of Haymakers, Troy, N. Y.; Thos. Carey, 2d b., late of Maryland; Frank Sellman, 3d b., late of Pastime, of Baltimore; Ed. Mincher, l. f., late of Maryland Club; T. Donnelly, c. f., late of Expert, Philadelphia; Wm. Kelly, r. f., late of Orientals, N. Y.; Jos. McDermott, sub., Eckfords, N. Y. Their grounds are in good order and all visiting clubs are promised satisfactory receipts, and that they will meet a good nine.

THE AMATEUR SWANN CLUB, of Baltimore re-organized on April 5th, by electing the following officers:—president, Wm. J. Smith; vice-president, Thos. Eaton; recording secretary, J. J. Burke; corresponding secretary, Chas. Smith, Jr.; treasurer, James Cole; directors, Wm. J. Smith, Thomas Eaton, Chas. Smith, Jr., Aaron Thomas and Con. Finn.

THE SAVANNAH (GA.) CLUB elected the following officers on the 3d inst.:—President, John W. Anderson; vice president, J. P. Williams n; secretary and treasurer, W. H. Turner; directors, J. P. Williamson, George H. Potts, L. D. Alden and John McNulty. A committee of five was also appointed to take charge of the Mutuals upon their arrival on the 10th inst.

THE MAPLE LEAF CLUB, of Hamilton, Ont., have elected the following officers:—President, Wm. Shuttleworth, re-elected; vice-president, T. C. Carroll, re-elected; secretary and treasurer, E. J. Moore; field directors, Charles Cook, W. Watson and H. Childs. Captain of the Nine, W. Watson.

OLD ELM, OF PITTSFIELD MASS.—This club is officered as follows for the current year:—Wm. R. Plunkett, president; Benj. Evans, vice president; Frank H. Pitt, treasurer; John Allen Rood, secretary; W. A. Coogan, W. G. Backus, Jr., and G. Morton and A. N. Chapin, directors and match committee.

THE HAYMAKER GAMES.—By a letter from Mr. Schofield we learn that the date for the Boston match has been changed from the 8th to the 9th of May, the return game to be played in Boston, May 16th. The Haymakers intend having a grand ball on the 17th inst., and the committee includes the ten players.

THE MUFFINS and Cellar Rats, composed of players connected with the Howe Sewing Machine Manufactory, Bridgeport, Conn., had a tilt on the 7th inst., the former coming off victors by a count of 60 to 26.

THE WARREN, JR., CLUB opened play on the 6th inst., at Hunter's Point, L. I., he nine gaining a victory over a field of ten by a tally of 20 to 5.

THE TRY AND SOCIAL junior clubs played a game at Baltimore on the 6th inst., the former scoring 53 to 45.

THE WASHINGTONS beat the Surprise Club, by a score of 31 to 30, at New Orleans, on April 24.

NOTES AND GOSSIP.—Mr. N. E. Young, of the Olympic Club, of Washington, the Secretary of the Professional National Association, has been unable to procure a copy of the rules from Hayhoe, of Chicago. The fact is, the latter, we are told, has copyrighted the rules, something he can no more legally do than he could the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Young says in his communication to us that all professional clubs desirous of competing for the championship pennant must forward their applications, together with $10, to Harry Wright on or before May 1st. Brother Young's "amateurs" got terribly whipped last Thursday by the Olympic branch of the old Red Stocking nine. The score was 20 to 0. They were to try again on Easter Monday.....The junior Stars have reorganized and are ready to receive challenges.....The Warrens are to play the Tony Pastors at Hoboken, April 11th.....Mr. Kelly, of the Junior Association, says clubs now joining can pay for the "junior championship and silver ball" during the present season. The rules for 1871 will be distributed at the convention; also lithographic "certificates of membership" will be presented to every club in the association.

THE TRIGGER.

TRAP SHOOTING AT CHICAGO.—On March 21st the lovers of trigger sport at Chicago gathered in numbers at Tom Stagg's, to witness a series of contests, the principal of which was that for the international medal between Samuel Tyrrel and Edward Thomas, Jr., resulting in the success of the latter by the score of 21 to 18. David Bates is the next contestant for the medal. The persons who tied for the fourth prize at the recent Foster tournament then shot at five birds each, to decide the possession of the same. They were Alex. Price, F. Milligan, Fred. Abbey, Tom Stagg, James Steele, E. Thomas, Jr., F. Milligan for Joe Harris, J. Lane for John Downing, and George Steele. Tom Stagg and Jim Steele each killed five birds but the others failed so to do. Then five more birds each were put up for Stagg and Steele to shoot at. They killed three apiece, and still were tied. For want of birds the question was left undecided until some future day. The day's sport closed with some sweepstakes sparrow shooting. David Bates won the first, killing four; Charlie Kern and Rob Kenny tied on the second, each killing five, and divided the "put."

TAYLOR VS. TOURERS.—The match for $1,000, between the Champion, John Taylor, of Jersey City, and Johnny Touers, of California, will take place on Thursday, the 13th inst., at Thomas Taylor's hotel, "The Idle Hour," Greenville, N. J. They are to shoot at 100 single birds each, 1⅛oz. shot, 21 yards rise and 80 yards boundary, and to find, trap and handle for each other. Their previous match was so closely contested that unusual interest is attached to the present trial of skill, and betting is quite spirited.

JAMES S. CONLIN is to open his new shooting gallery, south-west corner of Broadway and Twenty-second street, on Thursday evening, April 13th, at 7½ o'clock.

THE LEGISLATURE of Massachusetts has passed a bill preventing the hunting of deer by hounds or other dogs in that state.

JOHN CONNERS and Thos. Kimber shot at 20 single birds each, for $20 a side, on April 4th, at Syracuse, N. Y., the former scoring 18 to 9.

CUPID'S FOIBLES, FOLLIES AND FANCIES.

LOVE AND ROMANCE.

At the commencement of the present century a young man made his appearance in Stratford, and spent a few weeks at the tavern which then existed to afford shelter to stage coach travelers. Whence he came and what his business none could guess. Directly opposite the tavern stood the small cottage and forge of a blacksmith named Folsom. He had a daughter who was the beauty of the village, and it was her fortune to captivate the heart of the young stranger. He told his love, said that he was from Scotland, that he was traveling incog., but in confidence gave her his real name, claiming that he was heir to a large fortune. She returned his love and they were married. A few weeks thereafter the stranger told his wife that he must visit New Orleans; he did so, and the gossips of the town made the young wife unhappy by their disagreeable hints and jeers. In a few months the husband returned, but before a week had elapsed he received a large budget of letters and told his wife that he must at once return to England, and must go alone. He took his departure, and the gossips had another glorious opportunity to make a confiding woman wretched. To all but herself it was a clear case of desertion; the wife became a mother and for two years lived on in silence and in hope. At the end of that time a letter was received by the Stratford beauty from her husband, directing her to go at once to New York with her child, taking nothing with her but the clothes she wore, and embark in a ship for her home in England. On her arrival in New York she found a ship splendidly furnished with every convenience and luxury for her comfort, and a servant ready to obey every wish that she might express. The ship duly arrived in England and the Stratford girl became the mistress of a superb mansion, and, as the wife of a baron*e*, was saluted by the aristocracy as Lady Samuel Sterling. On the death of her husband, many years ago, the Stratford boy succeeded to the title and wealth of his fathers, and in the last edition of the "Peerage and Baronetage" is spoken of as the issue of "Miss Folsom of Stratford, North America." When the late Professor Silliman visited England, some years since, he had the pleasure of meeting Lady Sterling at a dinner party, and was delighted to answer her many questions about her birthplace in Connecticut.

A LEGAL MARRIAGE AND A LOYAL WIFE.—There may sometimes be met in the streets of Portland a bright-eyed, rosy little woman, usually accompanied by two children, one a fair little girl, and the other an apple-munching urchin of six or eight years. Nothing extraordinary about that; but thereby hangs a tale. At the time of the "late unpleasantness" this little lady's lover was a soldier, and was down with Phil Sheridan, in the Shenandoah, where he lost a leg. The lady's friends notified her that of course she would regard the engagement as cancelled. "I shall do nothing of the kind," she replied. "What, marry a one-legged man?" "Of course I'm going to! Why, bless your souls, if they'd shot James all away and saved the leg, I'd have married that!" Thank heaven, says a local paper, she was not reduced to that. James has a good cork leg, a good situation, two nice babies, and one of the truest and best little wives in Christendom.

THE GREEN MONSTER'S PENALTY.—A woman of highly respectable connections having become convinced that her husband was more attentive evenings to certain Magdelenes residing on Howard street, San Francisco, Cal., says an exchange of that city, than he, under his marriage vows, had a legal right to be, and, smarting under his neglect and fired with jealousy, resolved to ascertain, by personal observation, whether the rumor of his habitual visits to a certain house in that street were true. Very unwisely she demanded and obtained admittance to the house, when she upraided the "girls" with seducing her husband away from her side. The consequence was that she was assaulted with a shower of invective by the frail ones, who followed up their hard words by harder blows, giving the jealous creature a most unmerciful pounding, besides tearing her hair, clothes and bonnet off of her. She complained to some friends, who cleaned the house out, but that will not restore the handful of hair, nor make the poor woman any less jealous.

MAGDALEN!

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY WALDORF H. PHILLIPS.

They lift up their skirts as they go passing by,
And they look down on me with a scornful eye;
And their hearts are steeled to my cries of mercy,
And I know that they murmur, "What mockery!"
(Mockery indeed! What else is this life?
A mockery—war—continual strife!)
And they make a wide sweep, as though in fear
Of inhaling with me the same foul air;
And they seem to forget I was pure on a time,
And they drive me still further and deeper in crime.
Oh! had they but helped me when first I fell,
I had not for bread my soul had to sell!
But "no," they said. God! Yet I once was a belle,
And in a grand house in affluence did dwell.
Oh, then I was happy, and knew not what was sad—
Is it strange, then, that sometimes I feel as though mad
When I think of my wrongs and think of my woe,
And think of the pleasures of long, long ago;
When I think of days past, I feel ready to sink,
And I rush from reflection—seek refuge in drink!
Oh! merciful God! who in Heaven doth dwell,
Thou, thou alone, what I have suffered can tell!
I trusted in man and I was betrayed,
And what I am now by him I was made!
Oh! I have begged for pity, begged on my knees,
But they all passed me by, nor heeded my cries;
"I was a fool to trust him," is all that they say—
And think not what they might have done. Too weak to pray;
Living, a mother, and yet not a wife—
Too great a coward to take my own life;
Many a time I've lain awake in my bed,
And wished that I had been long, long ago dead!
The world knows no pity, else I had been saved,
And not been so wicked and lost and depraved;
But they lift up their skirts, as they go passing by,
And they look down on me with a scornful eye;
And they seem to forget I was pure on a time,
And they drive me still further and deeper in crime.
Oh, Heavenly Father! take me to thee, I crave,
For I know there is no rest except in the grave!

A FAIR FREE LOVER

ON TRIAL FOR KILLING A. P. CRITTENDEN.

A case of more than usual interest, inasmuch as it furnishes ample food for gossip among the school for scandal in the Golden State, was up for trial at San Francisco, before Judge Dwir elle, the last week in March, commencing on the 27th:—

The culprit is Mrs. Laura D. Fair, about 35 years of age, the wife of W. D. Fair, a lawyer of Siskiyou, to whom she was married at Yreka about fifteen years ago. In 1860 he went to San Francisco and committed suicide by blowing his brains out while at Dr. Murphy's office. Mrs. Fair, a few years afterwards, made her début on the stage at Sacramento, and subsequently appeared in San Francisco and several other places on the coast. During the Washoe mining excitement she went to Virginia City, where she kept a boarding house or hotel. There her partner undertook to run the national flag up over the hotel. She threatened to shoot him and did wound him. She was tried for the offence and Mr. Crittenden was her counsel for defence. The jury, without leaving their seats, acquitted her. She afterwards went to San Francisco, where she married a man named Snyder, from whom she was soon divorced on the ground of his adultery. There, as well as in the state of Nevada, she was on very intimate terms with Mr. Crittenden. The relations between them were not private. They were frequently seen together in public and sometimes her child was with them. For several years the intimacy continued, but he at last seemed determined to break it off. The marriage with Snyder was a temporary interruption, but the intimacy was renewed after the divorce. He was advised to repel her at once and forever, but did not do so, alleging that he feared unpleasant disclosures and that she would kill herself in the event of his doing so. She threatened to commit suicide if he left her. The approach of his family from the east brought matters to a crisis, and even on the night before their arrival and the last fatal meeting, they were in each other's company. He is said to have walked seriously with her, and she threatened to kill herself if he forsook her and he implored her not to make such an attempt. For several days after the murder Mrs. Fair was in a condition of apparent delirium, at times calling on her victim to come to her, and saying that he promised to meet her at a certain time. She was constantly attended by a nurse and no one was admitted to her presence. A physician attended her, and she was kept almost constantly under the influence of opium. When removed to the county jail she was carried in a chair from her cell to the carriage. Mr. Crittenden, at the time of his death, was about fifty-eight years of age. He was a nephew of the late John J. Crittenden, United States Senator from Kentucky. While Andrew Jackson was President he received an appointment in the West Point military school, and graduated in the same class with Beauregard and Sherman in 1835. Soon after the discovery of gold in California he went there and made San Francisco his place of residence. He was brother-in-law of the late Tod Robinson, who, at the time of his death, was Supreme Court reporter. He was a very able lawyer and ranked high in the profession.

The charge against Mrs. Fair is given in the following opening statement of District Attorney Byrne:—The defendant at the bar, Laura D. Fair, is charged with the commission of the wilful crime of the murder of Alexander P. Crittenden, alleged to have been committed on board the steamboat El Capitan, on the 3d day of Nov. last; that she shot Mr. Crittenden, from the effects of which wound he died some thirty-five or forty hours afterwards. They would be enabled to show that three or four days prior to the shooting the prisoner went to a gun-shop to procure a pistol that she could use with ease, and that she did use it successfully on the 3d of Nov. On the day previous to the shooting she procured the services of a hack man to take her from her residence to the boat. The deceased went to Oakland to meet his wife on her return from the East. A few minutes after the departure of the boat from the Oakland wharf the defendant approached Mr. Crittenden and fired a pistol at him; he was a passenger on the boat, and she took passage for the purpose of accomplishing what she did so successfully. After the shooting she left the spot, mingled with the passengers, was arrested in the cabin and acknowledged that she did the shooting. In addition, they expected to prove that she was veiled, probably to avoid detection; that those who were near saw the shot fired, but could not distinguish her features.

W. H. Kentzel, in giving his evidence, said Mrs. Fair appeared to be very much excited when I arrested her; she was talking about her daughter being ruined; she said she and her daughter were ruined; she was saying that all the time, mumbling the same thing over and over; asked her where her daughter was; she said at San Jose; think she said she was going to have a spell, and would like to have some of her drops; she didn't talk much until she got in the afterpart of the boat; I understood Parker Crittenden to say, "That is the woman that murdered my father." Since the above date the case has continued and attracted crowded houses, and as might be supposed, numerous witnesses have in that time been examined, whose evidence we have not sufficient space to give. On April 5th, however, Mrs. Fair testified all day in her own behalf, admitting that she had been married four times; once since her connection with Crittenden. Two of her husbands committed suicide; from one she obtained a divorce, and one was living undivorced when she married the last two. She avowed the most advanced free love sentiments, declaring herself Crittenden's true wife in the sight of God, though his wife, to whom he had been married thirty-two years, and the mother of his children, is still living. She said her recent marriage with Snyder did not make her his wife, because she did not love him. Two women who applauded her were fined $25 each for contempt of court. Case not concluded on going to press.

SUNSHINE AND SHADE.

ABDUCTION OF A YOUNG GIRL.—AN ACTOR IN TROUBLE.

The abduction of a young girl, even in this city of crime and villainy, is a thing of rare occurrence, and when it does occur the public mind is much shocked. It will be so in this case, a narrative of which is given below:—For some months past there has been on exhibition at Apollo Hall a very cleverly painted panorama entitled, "Shade and Sunshine; or, Hand and Heart." Among the performers who assisted in giving variety to the entertainment was an Irish comic vocalist and dancer, whose name on the bills was posted as "Bryan O'Linn." O'Linn was a good performer, and afforded much amusement to the patrons of the panorama. Thus having achieved some reputation Tony Pastor engaged him for his establishment on the Bowery, where for the past few weeks he has been performing, the engagement closing on Saturday night. During his stay in the city he became acquainted with a young girl of sixteen, the daughter of a widow lady, whose name is withheld for the present for obvious reasons. The girl was pretty, and fond of dress, gaiety and excitement. She was charmed with the liveliness and bright animal spirits of O'Linn, who frequently visited her mother's house. The mother, however, has always been very circumspect with her daughter—guarding her with watchful care. Wherever the daughter went the mother usually accompanied her. Nothing was thought of his visits except in the light of social enjoyments. Last Sunday evening O'Linn called as usual, and asked the young lady if she would take a short walk and visit a confectioner and have some oysters. She readily accepted the invitation, and in response to a non-complying look of the mother O'Linn said, "Oh! it's only a short distance we're going—just around the corner, we will be back shortly." So the mother consented and the couple started. But they did not return. The widow became alarmed at her daughter's continued absence. She started in search of her daughter, but could not find her. She made inquiries, and at last learned that the two had been seen to enter a close carriage and drive rapidly off up town. After waiting anxiously for some hours and her daughter did not return, the widow became nearly frantic with alarm and grief, imagining all sorts of mishaps and dangers. And so all night long she was obliged to wait and hope and long for her daughter's return, but she did not return. The next day, Monday, it was the same; no tidings could be obtained of either her daughter or of Bryan O'Linn. He also had not been heard from since Sunday evening. She went to Tony Pastor, and related to him her trouble and anxiety of mind and obtain, if possible, any information concerning the movements of O'Linn. Tony told her that all that he knew about him was that O'Linn was advertised to appear in Philadelphia that Monday evening. The couple may have gone there. The widow at once returned home and started for Philadelphia in the evening train. Upon arriving there she at once proceeded to the theatre where he was to appear, and sure enough on the stage was the lively Bryan O'Linn. She hurriedly left the theatre and made a complaint, obtained a warrant for arrest, and, accompanied by an officer, returned to the theatre and arrested O'Linn as he was leaving the stage. He was greatly frightened and told the widow that he had taken her daughter to a certain house in West 27th street, where he left her, and proceeded to Philadelphia. O'Linn was put in prison and the widow returned to this city, and yesterday in company with Tony Pastor, who has shown a most commendable spirit in endeavoring to assist the poor woman to recover her child, they visited Superintendent Kelso, who at once put in operation a plan to find the girl, who, it is believed, is kept confined and concealed in the house above referred to. The house is said to be one of those called the Seven Sisters, a name by which they are well known to the police and to the denizens of the neighborhood. The matter was kept very secret, but the facts, as related, leaked out.—N. Y. Star, April 7th.

AGREED TO SEPARATE.

MUTUAL APPLICATION FOR DIVORCE NOT GRANTED.

One of the most unusual applications for divorce, because neither party had a charge to make against the other, was brought to the attention of Judge Spencer, in the Superior Court, on the 6th inst. It appears that as the Special Term was about closing, a remarkably fine looking young married couple accosted Captain Ryan, chief officer of the court. Both were well dressed. The husband, who was not over 21 years of age, acted as spokesman, and told the officer that they wanted a divorce. The officer said that they would have to go in and see the judge, as he had nothing to do with getting a divorce. They at once entered the court room, and standing together before the affable dispenser of the law, the young husband informed the court that they wanted to be divorced, they had lived long enough together. Judge Spencer asked if either had any complaint to make against the other? They had none, yet they wanted to be divorced. Judge Spencer informed them that, as they had been lawfully married, they were bound to live together, unless some complaint was made. It was easy enough to become married, but it was altogether a different thing and required a different process to unmarry themselves. Marriage was considered a civil contract which could be easily consummated; but, unlike other contracts, it could not be broken off at pleasure, even by consent of both parties, without some just cause, even if it did seem uncivil to live together when they would rather live apart. With unutterable surprise pictured on their countenances at the light of law which had been shed on their mistaken ideas of marital relations, the husband, with a home-sick smile, instinctively bent his elbow towards his adhesive helpmate, and thrusting her gloved hand familiarly through her husband's arm, they strode quietly but not unnoticed from the court room. The lady did not look to be over nineteen, and was particularly good-looking. They acted towards each other with the greatest civility, and left the court without divulging their name or residence.

THE NEW ENGLISH MARRIAGE BILL in reference to marrying a deceased wife's sister is thus criticised by the Church Review:—"This immoral, and we venture to say disgusting, measure is got up merely by a few rich men for the purpose of legalising their past offences against the laws of chastity, and for the gratification of their own self-will."

A TERRIBLE TRAGEDY.

JEALOUSY! MURDER!! SUICIDE!!!

A correspondent from Stone Fort, Saline county, writes that on the morning of March 26th that community was thrown into an intense commotion by the intelligence that an entire family, by the name of Dakins, had been murdered last night at a point three miles southeast of this place. The writer says:—

As soon as I heard the news I mounted my horse and visited the scene of the tragedy, a small log hut of one room on the land of Mr. Jerry Foley. It stands in the midst of a small clearing of, I should judge, an acre and a half in extent, surrounded on all sides by almost unbroken forest. It lies about three hundred yards from the county road, from which it is reached by a bridle path. On reaching the hut I found about a dozen men of the neighborhood, all terribly excited and looking the horror each one felt. Dismounting and hitching my horse, I entered the hut, and hope that it may never be my fortune to look upon a similar spectacle. On and diagonally across some old quilts and blankets stretched upon a rude framework in the corner to the right hand as you enter the door, was the body of a woman of apparently thirty-four or thirty-five, with her throat cut and hacked in a fearful manner, the jugular veins, windpipe, arteries, everything being severed, and the head only held to the trunk by the vertebræ. There was a deep incision across the palm of the right hand, as though a sharp knife had been suddenly drawn through the clenched fist. Several deep and long cuts were visible on her shoulders and breast, but nowhere could be discovered any stabs, showing that the murder was not committed with a sharp pointed instrument. Near the fireplace, with her head partially in an old skillet, lay a fair haired little girl of some twelve years of age, with her throat cut from ear to ear. In the corner farthest from the door, and on the same side of the room where the woman was lying, on a pallet evidently where the children slept of nights, lay the bodies of two little boys, one across the other, aged respectively about seven and five, both with their throats cut. On the floor near, and partially under the bed where the woman lay, was the body of another girl apparently not more than three years old, her head nearly severed from her body. Such was the horrible spectacle that greeted my sight on entering the hut. The floor, the walls, the few articles of furniture, everything in and about the miserable apartment were deluged with blood. From indications, the woman's struggle for life must have been protracted and furious, until she succumbed from loss of blood or a disabling stroke of the instrument of slaughter. Bloody tracks on the door-sill, and a trail of blood leading in a northeasterly direction from the house, pointed out the course of the murderer's flight. Pursuing parties started upon the trail, but did not proceed more than one hundred yards before they came upon the sequel and end of this terrible tragedy of the night. The body of an infant of not more than a year old lay partially clasped by the left arm of a man, it having shared the fate of its mother, brothers and sisters. The man, who was no other than Dakins, was also dead, with a gaping wound across his throat. His blood-stained shirt, pants and a razor lying near the body, where it must have fallen from his hand the moment after inflicting the fatal wound upon his throat, proclaimed him to be the author of the wholesale butchery of his family, despatching his own guilty soul to the other world swiftly after the shades of his victims.

As the man died and left no sign, the causes that led to the commission of the murders can only be conjectured. The Dakins had been living here only a few months, but how long I cannot state. I understand, however, from Jefferson county, and little or nothing is known by anyone here of their former history. Dakins was about forty-two or three years of age, and addicted to the excessive use of liquor, under the influence and in the habit of drinking to excess. He was also in the habit of speaking very harshly of his wife in very gross and uncomplimentary terms. More than once, I am informed, he has asserted that he left his former home to break off a criminal intimacy between his wife and a married man, and a brother of the latter, he has been heard to express doubts of the paternity of the children. The supposition is that the poor wretch, from long nursing of his jealous fancies and brooding over his real or imaginary wrongs, and moved doubtless by the liquor he had taken in too during the afternoon drinking pretty freely, in a moment of insane fury committed the rash acts which obliterated his entire family and led him to suicide.—Carbondale, Ill., New Era, April 6.

A SAD CASE.

A RESPECTABLE WOMAN ABANDONS HER FAMILY AND SACRIFICES HER VIRTUE.

Our attention has been drawn to a painful case in Alaska street. A few days since two respectable ladies visited the street in search of the sister of one of them, who, it was stated, had left her husband and children, and was supposed to be lurking in some of the dens of that restiferous locality. Upon application to a person familiar with all the haunts of vice in that region, it was ascertained that for several days the fugitive had been lodging in one of the vilest of those "hell's half acres." After some persuasion the erring one was induced to give her sister and friend an interview. The scene was a distressingly painful one. There were tears, regrets, criminations and recriminations. The woman who had abandoned husband, friends and home had come to Alaska street comfortably and genteely clad. She stood before her sister and friend in what is familiarly known as a "bummer's" dress. The good clothing had either been pawned for whisky or her thieving associates had robbed her of them. For a time she stoutly resisted all persuasion, and the sister and friend, heartbroken and discouraged, were compelled to leave her to her sad fate; but subsequently, by the Christian persuasion of the Rev. Mr. Long, the faithful Bedford street missionary, she was induced to promise that she would return to her home, which it is hoped she has before she did. The query naturally arises, why do so many women of respectable families choose Alaska street as a hiding place when they have fallen from the paths of sobriety and virtue? Mr. Long thinks it is because their friends are less likely to search for them there, not deeming it possible that they could have fallen so low as to associate with the depraved and gusty creatures that infest the fearful dens that abound there. The case above is a painful, though by no means an unfrequent one.—Philadelphia Evening Star.

SHOCKING DEPRAVITY.

For an unmentionable crime three youths have been arrested at Troy, N. Y., recently, named Daniel Leahy, Warren Craven and Cri-topher Chapeau, all genteel looking young fellows. After their arrest Leahy confessed that they occupied a room in an alley in Troy, into which they inveigled men and boys and committed crimes too beastly too mention. They were sentenced to four months imprisonment in the Albany Penitentiary, and it is to be hoped that the experience of prison life may cure them of the depraved crimes they have been practicing. The gang consists of fifteen or sixteen young men, all of whom it is hoped will be caught and punished.

By inquiries into the case, says the Troy Whig, our reporter has discovered that there has been, and perhaps is, a regularly organized body of these miscreated beings with regularly appointed officers. The object avowed is engaging in "high jinks," and to make root among the devotees, meetings were held on Green Island, and at first in a well known grove on the banks of the river. Next a small room in a house on the outskirts of the village was obtained. Subsequently the club room in this city was hired and occupied, which now, however, will be broken up. These misguided persons seemed to delight, as far as possible, to unsex themselves. Craven and Chapeau accused Leahy of being "jealous" of them. Leahy was called "Jane," Craven was known as "Sarah," while Chapeau's first name, Christopher, was softened into "Christine." "Look at her," said Chapeau yesterday, referring to Leahy, before a whole court room full of people, "I despise her, the nasty hussy!" Much praise is due to our police for ferreting out and putting a quietus upon one of the foulest clubs that ever rested upon the fair fame of our city.

A FATAL IMMERSION.—The corpse of a female was found on the night of the 6th inst, floating at the foot of East Twenty-second street, which is considered as that of Mrs. Emma Fox, wife of a Mr. Fox, who recently died at the Everett House, this city, of consumption. On her person was found a gold watch, maker, Tiffany & Co., No. 18,884, with E. F. engraved upon the case; one solitaire diamond ring, and one plain gold puzzle ring. During the past summer she lived at Newport with her husband, W. W. Fox, who, being of a jovial and fun-loving disposition, became so infatuated with drink that he could not leave it off. At the close of the season they came to this city, and being well provided for in a pecuniary point of view, hired a handsome suit of rooms at the Everett House. Until the night of the 11th of February, the last that was seen of her, she had been staying at Mr. Moser's, No. 432 Fifth avenue. They had been married about six years, and resided until late at Newport, Rhode Island, but in consequence of her husband's intemperate habits she refused to live with him. On the above date she told Mrs. Mary Moser all her troubles, stating that a man named Bradford had been endeavoring to lead her astray, and had inserted an advertisement in a morning paper for four successive days, which read as follows:—

"The boat is empty, let me hear from you."

She informed Mrs. Moser she had nothing to live for, and rather than submit to the insults of this man she would rather commit suicide, and announced her determination to do so. A short time ago her husband visited her to make over some $30,000 to him, which she refused to do. A misunderstanding also took place relative to some letters found by Fox, in her possession. On the night she left Mr. Moser's house, Mrs. Moser, fearing that she contemplated suicide, sent her son to watch her, but by some unfortunate circumstance he lost sight of her at Twenty-second street and Fifth avenue. She has an immense real estate, which goes to the relatives of her husband. She was to be buried in the same grave with her husband, at Poughkeepsie, on the 8th inst.

STREET VIOLETS.—That may be too pretty a name for the young and naughty little girls who flit about under the gas lights of the street, habitually mis-spending their time and playing the spider game with young men who, like the fly, are not unwilling to accept an invitation to "walk into my parlor." says the Boston Herald of the 1st inst. The law don't think that this is exactly the way for such girls to do, but they will do it, nevertheless. Just now the West End seems to be the most fashionable field for these girls to travel, but it 'aint quite as safe as it would be if officer Lagtit was on duty somewhere else. As might be expected, these girls have no particular love for this officer, as he troubleth them muchly during their gas-light wanderings. On Saturday night, Mary Hall, aged 19; Nellie Weston, aged 22; Hattie Lincoln, aged 18, and Rosa Mathews, aged 22, were unfortunate enough to fall into his hands, and this morning he introduced them in due form and with the proper papers to the court as "idle and disorderly" girls, which is one of the most modest and polite terms that our law makers have as yet adopted for saying the same thing that old King Solomon meant when he told how the strange woman used her eyelids and played her hand in his day and generation. The girls of those days might have had good attire and subtle hearts, the same as the Katydids of our day have, but they had no gaslight to help them on in their wicked ways and wiles, as our girls have. But after all, if the record is true, it is about six of one and half a dozen of the other, with the naughty girls then and the naughty girls now. Here and there, now and then, the jewel called virtue has met with rough usage, and perhaps it always will. But in order to put the young girls under a little salutary restraint, Katie Hale, Nellie Weston and Hattie Lincoln were placed on probation till the 17th of May next, while Rosa Mathews, who pleaded "not guilty," was given two months at the Island.

A NIGGER IN THE FENCE.—A piece of news, bordering on the romantic, came, a day or two since, to light in Communipaw, N. J., in which an aged colored woman, named Priscilla Hart, and her grand-daughter, are the prominent figures. It appears that Priscilla has accumulated $2,000, which she had deposited in a N. w York bank. While yet an infant she adopted her grand-daughter, named Sarah Pudley, who is now a good-looking mulatto girl, 17 years old. The old woman had her educated and bought her a piano, which she was taught to play at her house. It appears that some months ago a pale-faced young man, named Green, fell in love with Sarah, accomplished her ruin and induced her to steal her grandmother's bank-book, draw the $2,000, and give the money to him, when he decamped. Sarah acknowledged giving the booty to her lover; so the old woman is inconsolable, the young one about to become a mother, while Green is revelling on the spoils.

COURTESANS' CASTLES CAPTURED.—Sergeant McCombs, of the Jefferson Market Police, and aids, went to the houses No. 40 and 42 Fourth street, kept respectively by Mollie Howard and Marguerite Crome, and about 6 A. M., on the 1st inst., and arrested the inmates, four in number, at each place, on the complaint of Michael Pepper. In Crome's house a young girl was found who gave her name as Mary Webb. Four days previous she was persuaded to leave her home in Yonkers. A successful endeavor was made to bring about a marriage between her seducer, Luke Webb, a conductor on a Second avenue car and herself, as aside from her mis-step with him, she said she was pure. Mollie and Maggie were held in default of $500 bail each, and the others were committed for examination.

ANOTHER FRAIL ONE GONE.—Several suicides have occurred at Monroe, Mich., and vicinity recently, the last one being that of Miss Sarah I. Woods, a young lady living near Moffat's Mills. After writing a letter addressed to her mother confessing a criminal intimacy with one of the neighbors, a married man, she deliberately shot herself in the head with a revolver, and thus almost instantly put an end to her wretched existence. The neighbors threaten to deal in a similar manner with her destroyer if they can succeed in catching him.

A FUGITIVE POEM.

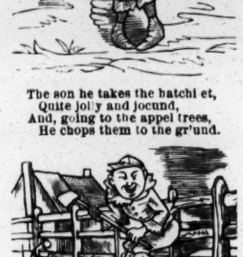
[ILLUSTRATED FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.]

FEBRUARY 22D, A. D., 1732.

There lived once a plan-ter,
With a son, his only luv,
To whom, upon his birth-day,
A bran new ax he guv.

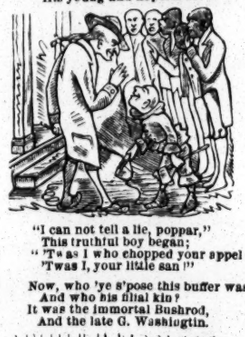
This farmer had a gardi-ing
All filled with appel trees,
Which for the city mar-ki-et
He was trying for to rai-ese.

The son he takes the hatchi-et,
Quite jolly and jocund,
And, going to the appel trees,
He chops them to the gr'und.



The farmer called his ser-vi-ents,
And ranged them in a row;
"Now, who has chopped my appel trees,
And killed them root and bo'?"

The servants stand ama-zied,
All drawn up in a line;
There comes a runnin up to him
His young and hopeful sci'n.



"I can not tell a lie, poppar,"
This truthful boy began;
"'Twas I, your little san!"

Now, who 'ye s'pose this buffer was,
And who his final kin?
It was the Immortal Bushrod,
And the late G. Washiugtin.

Now, whoso takes a hatchi-et,
And appel trees cuts down,
If he lives long enough, will be
A great and pious moun.

MERRY MOMENTS

LITERARY PLEASURES.—The wife of a litterateur in this city thinks it very nice to have an author for a husband. Whenever she feels restless he reads her something he has written, and in a few minutes she is in a profound and refreshing sleep.

REST REQUIRED.—"Why do you set your cup of coffee upon the chair, Mr. Jones?" said a worthy landlady one morning at breakfast. "It is so very weak, ma'am," replied Mr. Jones, demurely, "I thought I would let it take a rest."

SUITING HIS TASTE.—A strong, lazy fellow, who preferred begging to work, called on a gentleman and asked for "cold victuals and old clothes." The gentleman asked him what he did for a living. "Not much," said the fellow, "except traveling." "Traveling! Then you can travel pretty well?" "Oh, yes," said the beggar; "I'm very good at that." "Well, then," said the gentleman, coolly opening the door, "Let's see you travel."

RECOGNITION.—An individual whose opinion of his own merits was much higher than that entertained by the rest of the world, on being introduced to a literary man of some eminence, scanned his features very minutely and then pompously observed:—"I think, sir, I have seen you somewhere!" to which the gentleman addressed coolly replied:—"You possibly may, sir, as I have often been there."

ORTHODOX.—A speaker at a juvenile pic-nic is said to have delivered an address of which the following is a sample:—"You ought to be very kind to your little sisters. I once knew a bad boy who struck his sister a blow over the eye. Although she didn't fade and die in the summer time when the June roses were blowing, with sweet words of kindness on her pallid lips, she rose up and hit him over the head with a rolling pin so that he couldn't go to school for over a month on account of not being able to get his hat on."

AN UNENLIGHTENED AUDIENCE.—An actor recounted how, playing once to a well filled house, he was astonished at the loudly expressed appreciation of the occupants of the dress circle, who were absolutely uproarious in their laughter, and outdid the gods themselves in applauding, taking every point instantaneously, and welcoming it with three cheers accumulations. Gratified beyond measure the comedian could not refrain from congratulating the manager upon having such an excellent audience. "Yes," said the manager, "they did enjoy themselves amazingly. They are all mad folks. It is the system of the asylum doctor here to amuse his patients in every conceivable manner, and he is pretty nearly all the seats in the dress circle to-night."

SELF PRESERVATION.—A good anecdote is told of Captain Temple, of the United States steamer Tennessee. At the attack on Fort Fisher his ship took fire from a shell in the room next to the magazine. One of the little messenger tug boats was paying about the ship, and finally coming alongside, Captain Temple hailed her. "Ay! aye! sir," said the tug captain. "We are on fire," said Temple, "next to our powder magazine, and I thought it might possibly interest you to know that we are likely to blow up in about three minutes, unless we get the fire under." The suddenness with which the tug captain rang four bells and the tug plunged away in a bee line was laughable, in spite of the critical nature of the situation.

OUR SHOW PIECE.

DONE INTO JINGLING RHYME.

BY HARRY LINDLEY, COMEDIAN.

Shakespeare is dead—Barras instead,
Whose spectacle's long been the popular rage;
Tragedy moans in direst tones
Its banishment from our dramatic stage.
Managers say people will pay
For scenery grand and costume so scriptural;
Dramatic hash brings lots of cash,
And city taste is spoil by theatres rural.
Let us depict in colors strict
Provincial theatre in brightest array:
Holiday night—a house packed tight,
And "Ye Thieves" the name of the play;
Behind the scenes with fairy queens,
Under the stage a regular rookery—
Damp dressing room, poor actor's doom,
Preparing the feast for public cookery.
Fairies in tacks, extras in slacks;
Tights they should be, but consider their pay;
Carpenters hurry, hassle and flurry,
Whilst orchestra music deftly doth play.
A Fairy, young, says "trunks are long"—
"Not so," proclaims a nymph, aged, thin and wiry;
"Your limbs are queer, and gods are dear—
Toutzene animus celestibus ire."
Curtain ascends—distance it lends
Enchantment to the view, 'tis frequently said;
Scenes sometimes stick, music's too quick,
And "imperfect speakers" to prompt side are led.
Fairies admire lots of red fire
At queen no centre trap doth gaily appear,
Amber and gauze—shouts of applause
For ballet girls whose receipts are nominal here.
Tragedian, ponderous, in helmet wondrous,
Meanders and bellows throughout the play;
Comedian droll, with carrotty Poll,
Contrives to extract a smile by the way;
Beautiful girls, long hair and curls,
In Amazonian dress march a la militaire;
Nursery rhyme to waltzing time,
Which obtains an encore for the maidens so fair;
Our friend old rye the tongue can tie,
And one actor walks as if from dizziness—
In husbandmen tones he hardly groans.
"I'm the worst second old man in the business."
Villains all die—the end draws nigh—
What does these Herculean efforts all mean?
Bower of roses, lilies and posies,
'Tis the gorgeous transformation scene.
Open your shells, ring your bells,
Fasten to wires, immortals appear;
Light your fire—Clouds go higher—
And coral cave of Fairyland is here.
In vain, certain, drop the curtain,
And what but the smell of sulphur can stay;
Yawn politely, simper slightly,
And thus the evening has passed away.

CLIPPER MINSTRELS AT HOME.

The usual overture and chorus being disposed of, colloquial eccentricities are next in order, and so rapid is the lightning play of wit that the interlocutor seems to have found it a matter of no small exertion to keep up with Mr. Bones.

BONES.—I've been exercisin' myself a good deal lately over de subject of prize gift entertainments.

INTERLOCUTOR.—How's that, Mr. Bones? I hope you have not been speculating in lotteries.

BONES.—Oh no; I was only going to ask a question for information sake. What did de manager of de scheme draw at de last Grand Opera House gift enterprise raffle?

INT.—O, I don't know; some of the customary jewelry, breastpins—a gold watch, perhaps—like that old geode thing you've got hanging to your waistcoat.

BONES.—Why, first he drew a flattering picture, in order to sell his tickets, and den he drew a full house.

INT.—And I suppose he drew a long breath, I suppose, when he found that the sheriff was'nt after him with a warrant.

BONES.—I don't know about dat, but they say he drew a long bow, anyhow. In his advertisement.

INT.—You remind me of something in my own experience, Mr. Bones. You must know I once had an opera house built for me.

BONES.—Built for you?

INT.—Yes, sir, for me. You see, I was once an actor.

BONES.—You was once an actor?

INT.—Yes, an actor. I was a great favorite, too; played Hamulet, and Maccabey, and Richard, in a style to bring down the house.

BONES.—I know'd you about your ears in small pieces—you was too hefty for dem and dey tore up de benches.

INT.—Pshaw! don't be a fool. As I was saying, the leading men up at Skinnyallas, out of pure admiration for my talents, built me an opera house there. It was a vocation I could make what he call theatres in the country, you know. Well, they built the opera house, and an architect drew it—on paper; and I only wish I had the fellow here that made the design.

BONES.—You had a design on him, I s'pose, if you'd caught him.

INT.—You'd better believe I had! Well, sir, as I was saying, they put up the opera house.

BONES.—And den dey put it up for?

INT.—Pshaw! you won't let me get on. Well, sir, they built the house.

BONES.—And den dey billed de town, I suppose.

INT.—Billed, well I you'll see. They erected the theatre, and when it was done the committee sent for me, at my own expense, to inspect it. Well, sir, I met them by invitation and they proceeded to show me over it. There was a vast pile of masonry all covered with—what's this you call it—stucco, statues of the Muses on the facade, frescoes and what not. We passed in front. "This is the music store," said the head committee man, looking to the right; "handy for new music for the leader." "This on the left is the picture gallery and paint store—handy for the scene painter. Here, you see, down this flight of steps, is the cosmopolitan saloon and shooting gallery, two hundred deep—tables in the rear above. Up there, over the grand entrance, is the concert hall and club room, and right over that, extending the whole length of the building, the masonic lodge rooms. The second and third floors, by an admirably economical arrangement, are let out for lawyers' offices, and here are the rooms where the janitor lives with his family and boarders." "But where's my theatre?" said I—"I don't see my theatre." "Oh! that," said he, pushing open the door of a dark hole six feet by ten, which was the janitor's bed-room—"that's your theatre, sir!" HOUSE! Grand, sir, isn't it?" The janitor lighted up the only chandelier—I saw a small cubby hole, with a platform like a table at one end and a few bare benches at the other, and, being satisfied that a draught in the pocket would be all that would be needed in the place, I concluded that I wouldn't be used as a plaster to draw tenants for his building, and with draw myself."

BONES.—Yes, dey sold de public instid of de tickets, dat time. I was goin' to buy a lottery ticket myself once, but when I axed de feller dat sells dem what de lucky number was goin' to be, he wouldn't told me: so I didn't inwest.

INT.—We will now have the new ballad:—

FRIENDS OF OTHER YEARS.

BY JAMES BOOKER.

I would I were with other friends,
And was among the throng
When I traversed the grass grown glens
Amid its scenery wild,
And culled the yielding violet,
With beauties still declared;
Those pleasant memories linger yet
And help to fill life's void.
Chorus.—But they have gone, like pleasant dreams,
While I am left alone,
To brood o'er melancholy themes
Of life that's saddened grown.

The future hopes I deemed so bright,
Have darker grown since time
Consigned them to eternal night,
And crushed them in their prime.
The streamlet's voice has ceased its song,
And withered is the dale,
And I, of all that cheerful throng,
Am left to tell this tale.
Chorus.—But they have gone, etc.

BASE BALL.

THE PROFESSIONALS OF 1870.

LAST REVIEW.

The oldest short stop now in the professional arena is Dickey Pearce. We first saw Dick play on the 17th of August, 1858—thirteen years ago. It was in the second game of the series of Fashion Course matches between nines of New York and Brooklyn. The Brooklyn nine on that occasion included Masten, as catcher—one of the most graceful men who ever played behind the bat—old Frank Pigeon, as pitcher; Price, John Oliver and Mat. O'Brien on the bases; Dick Pearce, as short stop, and Pete O'Brien, Johnny Grum and Manolt in the field, the Pete O'Brien, Johnny Grum and Manolt of the Eckford and Atlantic clubs furnishing eight of the nine players. For years Pearce ranked as the best player in the position in the country, and even now, veteran as he is, there are few who equal him, and in regard to coolness, nerve and judgment in critical positions of a game there are none to surpass him even in these days of skilful ball players. Last season Pearce filled the position of short stop in the Atlantic Club in first rate style, but few errors being charged to him, while his good plays were numerous. Dick used to be a first class growler, and that, too, in the model growling nine of the country. But he has wisely seen the error of his ways in this respect, and since then he has got that temper of his under excellent control. As a scientific batsman Dick takes the lead. Last season he had the lively ball down to such a point that he could hit it just where he wanted to, and the way he bothered the fielders with nice little safe balls just over the heads of the in-fielders was a caution to careless fielders who were not posted in the points. When the dead ball came into vogue, however, Dick had to change his tactics, and for some time he failed to hit the dead ball safely; but he is rapidly getting it down to a point, and he may soon take the lead again. A point of Dick's play is his deliberate style of throwing. It is a rare thing for him to overthrow a ball to a base, and no man knows better when a throw to first is useless or not. Many short stops, when fielding hot balls, throw to first, as a regular thing, without ever thinking of whether they are too late or not, and thereby players on second or third bases at the time are enabled to run a base.

Radcliffe, of the Athletics, played a fine short field game last season, doing far more service in the position than he did behind the bat. We saw him make some splendid stops in some games, and his throwing was pretty accurate.

Hatfield, of the Mutual nine, allowed his temper to get the better of him too frequently to do himself justice in the field last season; but when in a good humor he made some fine displays. He was apt to throw too swiftly to first base, however, an error too many short stops are guilty of. "Be sure to throw straight or not at all," is the rule. Hasty throwing to a base is a prevailing fault with all untrained in-fielders.

Duffy and Craver excelled as short stops in their respective clubs after August, last season, and both are now first class players. Both have been under the ban of the association, but have repented and have been reinstated. "Let us have peace."

Bass was the short stop of the Union nine, and until the growlers of that club got at him he played a very fine game. We defy any man, no matter what his ability, to play his best game while under the continuous fire of growls and sneers from members of the nine or of the club he plays with. We warrant Bass will show a fine record this season with the Cleveland Club.

Force, of the Olympics, is the model short stop of Washington, and plays finely. James Snyder played at short field for the Eckfords last season, and filled the position creditably.

Flowers also played as short stop in the Haymaker nine with fair success; he has played better, however, than in the games we happened to see him in.

Ward did good service in the Cleveland nine, and so did Barnes in the Rockford Club, both being fine players, especially Barnes.

OUT-FIELDERS.

The occupants of the three positions in the outer field, viz.: left, centre and right, should be equal in their qualifications. Each should be able to throw a ball nearly a hundred yards, and certainly not less than seventy-five yards. They should be active men, good runners, and sure catchers of fly balls. They should never stand still or occupy one position all the time, but be ever on the move, ready for a quick run or to back up each other. They should never hold a ball a minute, but promptly return it to the in-field as soon as handled. In thus returning the ball they should invariably send it in to the second baseman unless some other fielder is designated on call by the captain. But in the case of a fly catch in the outer field, when bases are being run, the out-fie der should, of course, throw to the base player the base runner is returning to. The out-field is the place for the change pitcher of the nine to occupy. All three of the out-fielders should watch the movements of the pitcher and batsman closely, so as to be ready to judge the ball likely to be hit to them. When a good batsman is at the home base they can get in closer than when a home-run hitter han dles the ash. When the out-fielders see that foul balls are being hit frequently, they should get up near the foul ball line. It is easier to run in for a short ball than to back out for a high one, and therefore they should not stand in too close, though going out too far is worse still. No outfielder should stand still simply because the ball is not happen to come in his direction. Activity and judgment in being prompt in support is characteristic of first class play in the out as well as in the in-field. With the dead ball in use this season out-fielders will do well to stand in closer than hitherto. It is better to let a long ball go over short head now and then than to miss the chance of taking short high balls on the fly, which are sent just over the heads of the in-fielders. Where one long ball is hit five short ones are sent to the outer-field.

Among the most prominent of the professional left fielders of 1870 was Patterson, of the Mutual nine. He has an easy style of play, is a very sure catch and a good judge of a high ball. Leonard, too, of the Cincinnatis, played finely in the position, especially in judging running catches and in judging of a batsman's style of hitting. Treacy, of the Chicago nine, did some very fine fielding last season, his forte being in getting at low balls on the fly. Huebell, too, of the Cleveland nine, made several splendid catches in his New York games, and showed himself to be a first class player. Gedney, of the Union nine, bore off the honors of the season in the out-field in his club, and marked his play by several brilliant catches. One, of the Rockford nine, especially distinguished himself at left field, he showing judgment in watching batsmen as well as skill in catching fly balls. Chapman, of the Atlantics, made some fine catches, but John has become too heavy for out-field work. He would make a splendid first baseman now. Steve King put out several men by splendid catches in the Haymakers' nine. Conlan, of the Eckfords, made himself very useful at left field, being pretty sure on the catch.

At centre field, Geo. Hall, of the Atlantic, probably ranked among the best of the season's players. He certainly bore off the out-field honors in the Atlantics' last year. Cuthbert, of the Chicago nine, also ranked high as a sure man, as did Allison, of the Cleveland nine, and Eggler, of the Mutuals. But the one who showed the most skill in judging his batsmen was Harry Wright. Harry got at balls at centre field that few out-fielders ever trouble themselves to go for; he knew where to lay for most hitters, a great point in out fielding. "Sensy," of the Athletics—we ignore his right name, Sensenderfer, as too long—did good service in his position, both in making fine catches as well as in judging the play at the bat. York, of the Haymakers, also fielded handsomely. Simmons, of the Rockford nine, and Josh Snyder, of the Eckfords, too, also acquitted themselves well at centre field.

In the right field, as a general thing, the play was not so brilliant, but of those who specially excelled we may name McVey, of the Red Stockings, for active service, and "Clipper" Flynn, of the Chicago nine. The other right fielders who played with great credit were:—Stires, of the Rockford nine; Martin, of the Mutuals; Shelly, of the Unions; E. White, of the Clevelands; McDonald, of the Atlantics; Foran, of the Haymakers, and Berry, of the Athletics.

This about closes up the list of professionals as far as our memory serves us. In our comments on the players we have taken them up in no order of marked superiority, but just as they came to mind while we wrote, and, therefore, none need pride themselves on being placed first on the list, or feel put out at being the last on the record, unless they are specially referred to for their excellence or demerits. In a review of this kind brevity calls for but a passing criticism, and hence there is ample room left for improvement in enlarging upon the individual skill shown in the professional arena of 1870. We have not been able to include all the players, because many we did not see play at all, and others but in a few games. Our design has been more to instruct than to criticise. Below we give the batting averages of the short stops and outfielders of 1870 of the professional clubs.

THE BOSTON CLUB AT WORK.

By a letter from Harry Wright we get at the facts of the little game played on the Jarvis Field on the 25th ult., in which Harry's side was defeated. Harry pitched in that game purposely to give the fielders work and not to win. He says the weather was cold, and he tried to make the game lively, and the result was that the Harvards "warmed" them. On Thursday, the 30th ult., they had another game with the Harvards, but as the latter nines were not all there, they divided, Bush and Harry choosing sides. Harry in his letter says:—"I pitched the first five innings, they making one first base hit, Spalding pitching the other four. Bush and Tyler pitched for his side. We played in all 13 innings, score 17 to 3; I send you the record of nine only, as some of the players were changed after that. We open the season on Thursday—Fast day—playing against a picked nine from the following players:—Bush, Wells, Annan, Eustis, White, Rogers, Lovett, Bradbury, Barrows, &c. We will appear then for the first time in our new uniform. We are thinking of taking a trip to New York, say April 27th or 28th, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Wasnington, returning and playing at Troy on our way home." We hope the club will take the trip, as it would stir things up early. We give below the scores of the practice game played on Saturday, April 1st, with the Harvards. Wright's nine also defeated Bush's nine on the 30th ult. by a score of 13 to 2.

THE BEAVERWYCK CLUB, of Albany, N. Y., held a meeting on March 27th, when they elected the following officers:—President, S. P. Vanderbilt; Vice-President, Jas. J. Walsh; Recording Secretary, Chas. A. Healey; Corresponding Secretary, P. A. Walsh; Treasurer, Jas. McGeary; Directors—Jas. J. Walsh, Wm. Ryan and Jas. McGeary. Their uniform is white, with blue stockings.

THE AMENDED RULES OF 1871.

The new rules of the game which were adopted at the November Convention of 1870 went into force Dec. 1st of that year; but owing to the absence of the rules in printed form they have thus far been inoperative. Below we give the substance of the rules which were amended at the convention in question and which are now in force:—

First. The ball now weighs from five to five and a quarter ounces; is nine and a quarter inches in circumference, and contains just one ounce of rubber.

2. The pitcher is now obliged to deliver the ball to the batsman, either "high" or "low," according as he may call for it. Consequently if the batsman calls for a "low ball," and a low ball is not sent in to him, then the umpire must call one ball, and two and three balls in the order in which the unfair balls are delivered. The same rule, too, must be observed in the case of a high ball, if one is called for and not delivered.

3. A "low ball" is one sent in between knee and waist of the striker; and a high ball is one sent in between waist and shoulder.

4. A fair ball is one delivered over the home base and at the height called for by the striker. All others must be called in the order of their delivery.

5. An unfair ball is a ball not pitched over the home base, and sent in out of the fair reach of the striker; and all such must be called when delivered, except in the instance of the first ball pitched to each striker, which cannot be called.

6. In case the striker should not call for either a high or low ball, then the umpire must consider every ball a fair ball which is pitched over the home base and at the same time is not sent in lower than one foot from the ground nor higher than the shoulder of the striker.

7. Should the batsman refuse to strike at a ball pitched to him where he called for it and over the home base, then strikes must be called on him in the order of such refusal. No strike, however, can be called upon the batsman on the first ball sent in unless he strike at the ball.

8. The umpire must see that the striker does not stand nearer to the home base than one foot from it, for if he stands nearer to the base than one foot distant no ball can be called on the pitcher.

9. When the pitcher makes any motion to deliver the ball to the bat and fails to deliver it, no matter from what cause, then a "balk" must be called. But if he commits a balk by lifting or jerking the ball to the bat, then the umpire must call balls on him until three runs have been obtained by means of bases given on such called balls. He must then notify the pitcher that if such balking is persisted in the game will be declared forfeited. (The umpire must remember that the rule was thus amended with a view of putting a stop to underhand throwing for one thing, and, secondly, to prevent a pitcher from delaying a game by continually balking, the rules having previously given the umpire no authority to remove a pitcher who throws a ball, or any power to prevent him from delaying a game in this way until darkness had set in.)

10. The striker can take a forward step in striking at the ball, provided he at the same time stands astride the line of the home base; but he is not allowed to take any backward step.

11. The catcher is not allowed to stand nearer the home base than six feet when standing to take a ball pitched to the bat. The umpire must see to it that the batsman is allowed free swing for his bat, the catcher not being allowed to stand close enough to the striker as to run the risk of his being hit by the bat when it is swung forward to hit the ball.

12. If a fielder, while in the act of touching a base runner with the ball, has the ball knocked out of his hand by the runner in the collision which occurs, then the umpire must decide the man out, the same as if the ball had been held after the fielder had touched his man; but the umpire must, at the same time, be satisfied that the ball was held, if but for a moment.

13. The umpire should ascertain the distance of the fence, back of the catcher, from the home base, and unless it be ninety feet every passed ball touching it gives a base runner one base. The only exception to this rule is in the case of the fence forming the boundary line of the grounds.

14. The umpire, when a player runs from home to first base, is prohibited from deciding the player out if he be touched by the ball after over-running the base. The player is now allowed to overrun first base—but not the other bases—provided he promptly returns to first base after over-running it. Should he, however, attempt to run to second base, then his privilege ceases, and he can be put out from over-running, the same as at other bases.

15. Any ball pitched to the bat, which happens to touch the umpire, becomes a dead ball, and such ball can neither put a player out, nor can any base be run on such ball. The umpire, however, must avoid standing between the pitcher and catcher within the lines covering the home base.

16. The umpire is now prohibited from receiving any pecuniary compensation for his services.

These are all the amendments bearing upon umpiring.

THE ATLANTICS IN THE FIELD AGAIN.

On Thursday, April 6th, the Atlantic Club opened play for the season with a scrub practice game on the Capitoline ground, Brooklyn, on which occasion they had the Burnside Club nine, of South Brooklyn, as opponents, who, by the way, though nominally a junior club, number some pretty healthy "boys," ranging from 23 to 28 years of age; besides which, they are old hands at the business, and have played some pretty strong games for the past six seasons. Owing to the absence of several of the strong players of the Atlantic Club, neither Chapman, McDonald or Joe Oliver, of their old nine, nor Price, Wiggins, nor others of their newly elected players, being present, they were not able to place a very good team in the field, but six of the positions being properly defended. The fact is, the club lacks efficient management now more than ever. Indeed, on this occasion not an official of the club was present. The weather being fine and the grounds in good order, there was quite a large crowd of spectators gathered and these fully expected to see a good game. Owing to official incapacity, however, the new nine was not forthcoming, and the Atlantics had to place a scrub nine against the Burnsides, and a fine old game the Atlantic party managed to come off the victors. Some good play was shown by the two Halls, Remsen and Carney, of the Atlantic side; and by McLaughlin, Perry, Higbee and Conlan on the part of the Burnsides; Remsen leading at the bat on the one side and Conlan on the other. The score:—

THE WHITE STOCKINGS IN NEW ORLEANS.

In last week's issue was given the result of the games between the Chicago Club and the Excelsiors and Southerns, played on March 31st and April 2d, respectively, and the reception of our weekly batch of correspondence enables us to give the scores thereof:—

Umpire—W. F. Tracy, Lone Star B. B. C. Time of game—1 hour and 35 minutes.

In the game with the Southerns, Simmonds played second base, Foley going to right field, Woods having been summoned to New York by a telegram announcing the serious illness of his father. The game was very loosely played, and was scarcely equal to the efforts of a second rate amateur nine. Of the ten runs made by the Southerns only one was earned, the whole game being marked by much wild throwing, several muffed flys, and weak, inferior batting. On the part of the Southerns the play was simply disgraceful. Of the thirty-nine runs made by the Stockings only five were earned; old experienced players like Hennessy, Holtzman and Fay letting balls go by them with perfect impunity. Appended is the score:—

BALL TOSSING AT THE HUB.

Fast Day, April 6th, witnessed the playing of two games of some importance at Boston. The first was between the new Boston nine and a picked team, and was contested on the Union grounds, in the presence of about six thousand spectators. The result was an overwhelming victory for the former, as the appended score attests:—

Time of game—3 hours and 30 minutes.

THE QUICKSTEPS, of Bethlehem, Pa., have their nine together and will commence playing about the 1st of May. The nine is:—Kemerer, c.; Lockhart, p.; Wenner, 1st b.; Gone, 2d b.; Wertz, 3d b.; Mack, s. s.; with C. Miller, Murray, Groman and Powers as fielders. The club will wear their new uniform—blue stockings, white pants, white shirt, and white cap, plain. The club is anxious to receive challenges, which should be addressed to Frank Harniman, Secretary, Quickstep Base Ball Club. The club played thirteen games last year and won ten.

THE UNION STAR nine for the present season will consist of McCormack, p. and captain; Gordon, c.; Delmar, 1st b.; Batterson, 2d b.; Steveson, s. s.; Langan, 3d b.; Bowles, r. f.; McGee, c. f.; McKenney, l. f.; Barry, tenth man. They will take the field on the 8th of May, to play the Flyaway B. B. C. for the silver ball and junior championship. They will have a new uniform, consisting of green stockings, blue knee-breeches, white shirt, with word "Union," and small star and white kossuth hat, trimmed with green silk.

EAGLES, OF LOUISVILLE.—This excellent Kentucky club are making preparations for the coming season, and will offer superior inducements for all eastern clubs traveling westward. The grounds of the club at Cedar Hill are among the prettiest and pleasantest in the country. The nine will undergo but two changes, caused by the retirement of Anderson, c. f., and Bodley, 3d b. It will probably be as follows:—Osborne, c.; Booth, p.; Muir, 1st b.; H. Truman, 2d b.; Bayens, s. s.; O. Truman, 3d b.; Graham, r. f.; Merriweather, c. f.; McCullough, l. f.

THE ATHLETIC CLUB, OF BROOKLYN.—This club promises to be among the strongest of the amateur nines this season. They will open play on the Capitoline grounds on Wednesday next, when they will play against the field. Their nine includes Price, Richardson, Tom Forker, Wiggins, Proctor, Noonan, Booth and Bennett, with several more to fill up the places of occasional absentees.

THE EMPIRE CLUB, of Dubuque, Iowa, is officered as follows:—President, P. Brodsrick; Vice President, P. Desmond; Secretary, Chas. Mullin; Directors, Eugene Ward, John Burns, Samuel Kennedy and Edward McLaughlin.

ACROSS THE BORDER.—The Maple Leaf Club, of Guelph, C. W., held their annual meeting on the 3d inst., and reorganized, with the following gentlemen as officers for the present year:—P. McCurry, president; Thos. H. Taylor, vice-president; Thos. Goldie, secretary; Wm. Sunley, treasurer; H. Maddock, scorer; W. A. Bookless, Jno. Goldie and J. W. Colson, directors. This club played nine games last season, losing but one (at Syracuse); they beat the Flower City Club, of Rochester, by 45 to 17 and 47 to 8; also the Ontario, of Oswego, by 42 to 12. They have enclosed grounds, and promise to make it profitable to any professional clubs calling this year.

THE ST. FRANCIS XAVIER COLLEGE NINE is composed of L. Mulvany, of the Fly Aways; Donnelly, Lone Star; Marvin, Rose Hill; Newton, of the Harvard; Dooley, of the Equity, of the Bowery Theatre; Carney, Arctic; E. Mulvany, Pastime; Curran, Eclectic; Devlin, of the Putnam B. B. C. All challenges should be addressed to John P. Dooley, Secretary, 126 Henry street. The new rules prohibit College Clubs from playing any member of another club in their nine who is not an actual student in the college the club is attached to. Is this the case with this college nine?

THE ENERGETIC.—A young and promising amateur club of Philadelphia held a meeting on the 4th inst., when the following officers were elected:—President, W. P. Hill; Captain, A. N. Harris; Vice President, A. N. Harris; Secretary, R. Nickel; Treasurer, J. Beatty; Board of Directors, A. N. Harris, T. A. Harris and J. L. Luckenbach. The nine is to be selected from the following promising young players:—A. N. Harris, A. Garvin, W. Welsh, J. Welsh, R. Nickel, A. N. Troth, J. Beatty, H. Gresimer, J. Phipps and H. Emery.

THE PYTHIAN AND TWILIGHT CLUBS, composed of members of the Kentucky University, played a game at Lexington on the 1st inst., which the former won by a score of 76 to 17.

BILLIARDS.

DION AND RUDOLPHE AGAIN.—JOSEPH VANQUISHED.—The telegraph reports that on the 31st Rudolphe defeated Cyrille Dion by a score of 1,500 to 1,005, on the 66th innings; and that on the 1st inst., Rudolphe defeated Dion by a score of 1,500 to 1,288. It was Joseph who was beaten on the second night, the game being the four ball, 1,500 points up, on a 5½x11 table, for $1,000 a side, and making the second of the series between these celebrated players, Dion having won the first. The third, and deciding game, 500 points, three ball caroms, should be played about the 15th.

THE ROCHESTER TOURNAMENT.—The tournament initiated by Mr. George Tatteau was a very successful affair, although the favorite, Monsieur Daly, was eclipsed by young Slosson. The entries, in addition to Daly, were Frank Fitch, Eugene Kimball, William Jakes, Frank Twitchell, Jeff. Ferguson and George Slosson. The American game, 1,000 points, on a carom table, was played. Slosson, beaten by no one, won first prize—$200—and also $25 for best run (342). Daly took second money, $70. His best run was 303, and he made the best single average, 100. The third prize was $30, and Kimball won it.

THE LONG ISLAND AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—The holder of Long Island's emblematic cue is thus challenged through the stakeholder:—

BROOKLYN, April 5, 1871.

A. R. SAMUELLS, Esq.—DEAR SIR.—I hereby challenge Mr. Kirby (the present champion) to play me a match game of billiards for the cue and championship of Long Island, according to the rules governing previous contests for the same. The game to take place at such time as may be mutually agreeable. Very respectfully,

A. VANDEWERKER.

DERBY AND RUDOPHE VS. THE TWO DIONS.—Derby and Rudolphe, hand-in-glove in San Francisco, have issued a challenge for two contests, each for from $600 to $2,000 a side, they to play double handed against the two Dions. To play this match within the time specified by the challengers is impossible, except at a great sacrifice on the Dions' part.

A CHANCE FOR COON OR RHINES.—Frank Parker has offered to match Albert Garnier to play either Henry Rhines or John W. Coon at the three-ball game, the stake to be $250 a side, and Garnier to give odds of 100 to 600. As Coon has already beaten Garnier at this odds, Parker's offer is a bold one.

DERBY AND CYRILLE DION.—These cueists have had several tilts for sums varying from $25 to $100, in San Francisco, Cyrille having much the best of it.

PLUNKETT AND NELMS MATCHED.—These leading Philadelphia experts have entered into a match for $200 a side, to play 1,500 up, on a carom table, inside of fifty days.

ALL OVER THE TABLE.—Frank Parker began practice for his championship match, with C. Dion, on the 3d.... A tournament for the championship of New Jersey, to be held in Newark, has been proposed.....John Lee, a clever fifteen-ball pool keeper, is dead..... William Goldthwait has withdrawn from the Odeon rooms, Williamsburgh.....The highest run, so far, for the gold medal, at Taylor's room, Jersey City, is 216, by Mr. John P. Oulver.....In Chicago the odds on the next championship match are two to one in favor of Dion.....Harry Keating, of Fourth avenue, has invented a cuetightening machine.....Rudolphe has averaged 107 1-7 in a practice game, in San Francisco.....The leading average in Wiseman's (New York) and Samuells' (Brooklyn) rooms, are in a fair way of being matched.....Fort Edward is to have a new room, with four Standard American Tables, and Duconta one, with two tables.....A Kleeman table is to be used in the next championship match.....Garnier is doing a fine business in Chicago. He is announced to play in Titusville about the 18th..... There was a contest, on the 4th inst., for an amateur championship of Wiseman's Rooms. Averaging 13 54-79, Mr. Lawrence Norton defeated Mr. G. H. King in a game of 1,000, American caroms. Mr. Norton has been challenged by Mr. William J. Hewell, and they will play on the 18th..... Capt. Hoyle took in nearly $400 on the day of opening his "Vineyard."..... On the 3d, Charles Masters opened a room in Chicago.....Harry Eaton has a room in Brooklyn..... Cyrille Dion threatens to "make somebody sick," for venturing to question his right to purpose a championship game in defiance of the rules. Keep cool!..... Brunswick Hall, Chicago, injured by fire, is once more in full blast.....John Montgomery has left Gault's and is now with James Kennan.....Phelan's forte is fishing, and he and Prof. Lake have arranged a fine programme for the spring..... Springfield, Ohio, has a billiard prodigy whose name is Lewis Shaw.....The Chicagoans know how to keep a secret. It was written from this city, confidentially, that two foreign players (names not given) were likely to come here soon. The letter had scarcely reached Chicago before one of the dailies in that city made the above public..... Byron Lillett has severed his connection with the Astor, and report has it that he has gone back to Penn Yan.....'Shorty," the great Cuban pool player, has quit McKinley's.....A gentleman from Chicago has volunteered to furnish the balance of Cyrille Dion's stake, in case that player does not have it up by the 16th..... Nelms, Estephe and Rockhill have been giving exhibitions in the suburbs of Philadelphia.

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, April 10, '71.

EASTER MONDAY! Close of the season of Lent, and opening of the festive campaign of the spring of '71. Easter doesn't seem the same to us now as it did when we were boys. We see very few dyed eggs now-a-days, whereas in former years the shop windows displayed eggs dyed in all the hues of the rainbow, some beautifully engraved and ornamented, and tempting, by their highly colored effects, the youthful admirer of the beauties of hen fruit. And such egg-picking as we had in those days! We think we hear "the fellers" now, as they exclaim:—"Hello, Bill, got a egg?" "Yes, want to pick?" "Let's try her. How'll you go it?" "Go yer even." "No yer won't—go me pint and butt agin yer pint?" "Oh, no; tell you what—let's go even sides?" And after a lengthy negotiation, worthy of the consideration of our high joint commission, "the fellers" come to an understanding, and peg away at each other's egg until the weaker is broken and captured by the adversary. Urchins of the heathen Chinee stamp used to play their points in a way frightful to see; many a legitimate egg have we forfeited by picking "unsight unseen," when the audacious reprobate opposed to us would ring in his marble egg, against which nothing could stand. Very little of that sort of thing is going on now; the same swindle, however, is played on a larger scale in Wall street and other localities where "respectable gentlemen" trade and dicker and rob each other on the stone egg principle. But avast there, or shiver me toplights, we forget which; we have gone far enough with the egg business, so let us proceed to other matters.

.....Each and every place of amusement offers us something fresh for Easter, a new play at this house, a new star at that, and so on all the way through. Managers look cheerful and benign once more—treasurers look bland—and theatrical boarding housekeepers, who have been compelling their guests to observe Lent by fasting, now observe their provisions disappear with fear and trembling. Let the revels proceed, while we indite a few lines in honor of

EASTER.

How happy when the Lent term's o'er
To see the last new play go on,
We hail it, though we've seen it before,
With tram, coram, dago!
Chorus, with a will:—Igo, ago,
Tram, coram, dago.
Its jolly when the stars are out
To see the last new play go.

Let others doze in bars who please,
Or on any other lay go,
In some parquet I take my ease,
With my tram, coram, dago!
Chorus, as before, with renewed vim.—And "tram, coram, dago."

'Tis sweet to lounge in Fisk's house, where
The dancers show a leg, O!
With music playing all the while—
Tram, coram, dago!
Chorus by the audience, with gusto, and:—"tram, coram, dago."

And e'en when full of good Rye
You've nearly got a keg, O,
In Bowery halls to take a "fly,"
For tram, coram, dago.
Chorus, sotto voce, and—"tram, coram, dago."

If life's at best a troubled dream,
We'll let it like a play go,
And sing cheerfully gliding down the stream,
Our tram, coram, dago!
Chorus, to wind up:—Igo, ago,
Tram, coram, dago;
It's jolly when the stars are out
To see the merry play go.

......"Our Jim" was somewhat insulted the other day, although he was not aware of the fact until we had kindly pointed out to him the offending passage. Wishing to present a suitable appearance for the holiday season, Jim concluded to get a new suit of clothes, and to this end he called upon a German tailor, with whom he was slightly acquainted. In answer to Jim's inquiry as to the cost, the "ninth part of a man" replied:—"I charge some peoples vot I knows different prices—some dose mans you see dere, I charge heem ten dollars for dot coat; I makes you von shoost like em for eight." "Well, that's hunky," says the boy; "what do you charge that other heffer so much for, Dutchy?" "I tole you," responded the gentleman of many measures; "dose mans pays, sure; so I git all dot I kin out of heem; dem peoples vat I tink shood a leetle shaky, dem I charge so I'm shoost dot I don't kin jist git my money back, I bead you; if I charge him ten dollars, and he dinks vere I leef, den I lose shoost dot much; but if I ony make him pay eight dollars, and he don't vas vort sottin, den I don't lose so much like I shall charge him ten—so by dot I hafe a profit of two dollars exactly." "That's so," replied Jim, although he was no reader or a solution of the problem before; he was before; "then you'll make me a coat for eight, is that it, Dutchy?" "Dot's vat I say so; of mine frynds vot calculating German will make just two dollars out of Jim's coat by not charging more than eight dollars..... business has been right queer in some of the rural districts, and various expedients have had to be resorted to during Lent in order to keep up any sort of a show of people in the auditorium. In one town we are told, even a free show failed to fill the house, and it was not until the free-seeing manager gave a free performance, with a Punch Oeroven fa! that the house was crowded from pit to dome. Here is a hint for those managers whose audiences are more "appreciative" than numerous.....They do say that Tony Pastor is getting so rich at his theatre in the Bowery that he thinks of changing his name to John Jacob Pastor.....As evening performance is enough for most managers and will as much as artists care for; yet we see that a director of one of our Broadway establishments is actually compelling his company to play "Day and Night."..... Were you ever an usher in a theatre or church? No? Well, then, don't you be one. Ushing is by no means an enviable position, though some parties we know of do make it pay like they had the run of a bar-room till. Listen, while we make rhymes about

YE USHER.

Where wandering countrymen are seen
For "orchestra" or "circle,"
With hair and tie immaculate
He permeates the "front;"
He should be quick, obliging, and
In everything polite,
For 'tis with him to "make or mar"
The comfort of the night.

Stray extracts of the green room lore
Come floating out to him—
He hears the secrets of the "star"
That "travels on her limb;"
He knows about the rich boquets
That gaily bud and blow
(He has to throw them every night—
Of course he ought to know).

The Army mourned "Henry Man"
Sometimes doth not appear;
He knows the "sudden illness" is
Quite traceable to beer!
He's heard the queen as up all night
To trim those royal skirts!
And that the king, who boasts of wealth,
Is "shaky" as to shirts!

He looks upon the audience as
A shepherd on his flocks—
He knows if "Maud Matilda" pays
To occupy the "box!"
In pleasure and prosperity
May all his years be spent!
A necessary nature, he,
Of use and ornament.

AT THE FRENCH OPERA HOUSE, New Orleans, La., La Ricci's Italian opera, entitled "Crispini e Comare," but rendered in French and produced as "Dr. Crispin," was sung for the first time on Monday evening, March 27th. Mr. Perie appearing as the cobbler doctor; his singing and acting of the role being excellent. Mme. Naddi, as his wife, acted with a charming naiveté, while her voice was as refreshingly sweet and melodious as ever. Mr. Ilegbel as Count Ottavio was also very successful, while Mme. Dennery as the Fairy was also very good, notwithstanding the feebleness of her voice. On Tuesday, March 28th, the long-looked for benefit of Mr. Dumestre took place, when Verdi's grand opera of "Rigoletto" was presented for the first time, before a fashionable and large audience. On March 30th Mr. Lafrano was the recipient of a complimentary benefit, which occasion he appeared in each of the operas that he has made famous by his wonderful singing in the upper register, viz., the first and second acts of "William Tell," the third act of "Trovatore" and the third act of "The Martyrs." On April 1st "Rigoletto" was repeated, as also was "Dr. Crispin" on April 2d. There will be no operatic performances during this week, as it is Holy Week, but it is understood there will be a sacred concert on Monday and Tuesday evenings, after which the house will remain closed until Easter Monday night, when "Les Amours du Diable" will be produced for Mme. Naddi's benefit. So writes our correspondent on April 3d.

THE FRANKO CHILDREN, violinists and pianists, who some time since made their debut in New York city and have since been residing in New Orleans, La., recently sailed for Breslau, Prussia, where they will reside and resume their profession.

MISS JEANIE WATSON and J. F. Hardy, Scottish vocalists, gave two concerts in Toronto, Ont., April 7th and 8th.

MME. RUDERSDORF and Mr. Cummings, an English tenor, are coming to this country, having been engaged to sing at the Triennial Festival of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston, Mass., which takes place in May.

BLIND TOM gave three concerts at Mozart Hall, Cincinnati, on the 3d, 4th and 5th.

THE RICHINGS' OPERA TROUPE commenced at Mozart Hall, Cincinnati, for two weeks (probably), on the 10th. Their repertoire for the opening nights is "Il Trovatore," "Bohemian Girl," "Fidelio," "Marriage of Figaro," "Huguenots," "Martha" and "Der Freischutz," "Martha" being for Saturday's matinee.

FATHER WILSON'S OLD FOLKS gave a concert at Pike's Music Hall, Cincinnati, on the 5th, to an immense audience. Much to the surprise of most present, the troupe, which numbers fifty, turned out to be composed of amateurs from among the best families in the city, though the advertisement led everybody to suppose them professionals, and were to give a concert in Cincinnati on the 8th. Messrs. Thos. W. Hubbert and A. B. Huston, of the Cincinnati Shakespeare Club, recited very ably the "Bridge of Sighs" and "Seven Ages of Man," respectively.

HI. HENRI, cornetist and leader of orchestra, whose address is in another column, will shortly be at liberty to engage as above with a first class troupe.

THE BEETHOVEN SOCIETY, under the direction of Mr. Carl Wolfsohn, will give their second grand concert at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on Saturday evening, the 15th inst.

MISS MAGGIE HAROLD, whose vocalization and acting gained her much popularity while connected with the Sanpho Operetta Troupe, was in Philadelphia last week, enjoying a much needed respite from her professional duties. Miss Harold has been engaged by the Holman Opera Troupe, opening in Toronto, Canada, on the 10th inst.

MRS. SUSAN GALTON KELLEHER will make her first appearance in twelve months, in a concert, on Friday evening, the 14th inst., at Musical Fund Hall, Philadelphia. Mr. Keleher will be assisted by Mlle. Josephine Schimpf, Mr. George Simpson, Mr. W. W. Gilchrist, Mr. Alfred Keleher and Mr. Frank Glider.

BECK'S PHILADELPHIA BAND will give an instrumental and vocal concert at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on the evening of Thursday, the 13th inst., when Signora Caramano will make her first appearance in this country, and other artists will appear.

ON FRIDAY EVENING, 14th inst., at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, the Hassler Brothers will give a vocal and instrumental concert. Miss Pauline Nininger, prima donna; Mr. Wensel Kopta, violinist, and Hassler's Orchestral and Military Band will appear in an attractive programme.

THE BERGEN FAMILY of Swiss Bell Ringers are announced to perform in St. Louis, Mo., April 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th.

THE GRAND ENGLISH OPERA COMBINATION performed April 4th and 5th in Springfield, Ill., singing the "Bohemian Girl" and "Il Trovatore."

THE AMERICAN COMIC OPERA TROUPE, with Miss Marion Taylor as the principal attraction, is billed to perform in Wesley Hall, Syracuse, N. Y., April 11th, 12th and 13th.

GEORGIE DEAN SPAULDING'S CLASSICAL AND COMICAL CONCERT TROUPE is billed to sing in Canandaigua, N. Y., April 10th; Victor, 11th; Phelps, 12th; Waterloo, 13th; Seneca Falls, 14th, and Skaneateles, 15th.

MRS. C. R. HUMPHENY is announced to give a concert in Martin Hall, Albany, N. Y., April 13th, assisted by Mrs. D. A. Spring, Miss Annabee, H. W. Feaseden, H. M. Dow and M. E. Moranski.

J. L. BROOKS, pianist, advertises that he can be engaged.

THE YOUNG CALIFORNIA PIANISTS, the Laemlein Sisters, who were instructed by Gottschalk, give their first musical soiree in Baltimore on Friday evening, April 14th.

Variety Halls.

AT WILD'S OPERA HOUSE, Syracuse, N. Y., Miss Millie Turnour, in her daring acts upon the trapeze, has been greeted nightly with applause. G. S. Knight and Harry Watson, in their Dutch act, create plenty of mirth. The songs of Fanny Archer and Lizzie Sherman are popular and are encored every evening. Peasley and Fitzgerald, in their comic song and dance, meet with success. Mike Foley, negro comedian; Nicolo Norton, juggler; the Siegels, Harrison sisters and Tillie Antonio, dancers, make up a very pleasing entertainment. Miss Ada Wray has been engaged and will appear on the 10th inst. Mr. Wild has a good company, and the efforts of this gentleman to cater for the amusement of the citizens of Syracuse are appreciated by enthusiastic audiences. So writes a correspondent.

AT THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Kansas City, Mo., Kate Fisher has had crowded houses during her engagement. "The Three Fast Men" has held the boards for the week ending April 1st, when Miss Fisher closed her engagement. The olio entertainment seems to improve each evening. Mr. J. F. Hill gave a very daring performance on the trapeze. Geo. Wilson, in his negro song and dance, "Pretty Smiling Faces," composed by Ned Straight, rendered it in good style. Quinn and Rogers have gone to St. Louis for a short time. The new artists on the boards are Miss Polly Daly, Maud De Lide and Emma Morton, and the double song and dance men, Gilfoil and Rourke. Mlle. Marie Zoel has left for San Francisco, under engagement at the Bella Union Theatre. So writes our correspondent.

THE FOLLOWING CHANGES in the Metropolitan Hall company, Washington, D. C., have occurred. Tom McIntyre left on the 8th, to join a circus company; Fred. Williams succeeded him. Johnny Shay, the Indian rubber song and dance man, has to be called back on the same date and left for Baltimore on the 9th, to commence an engagement at the Opera House there on the following evening. Mlle. Wheeler fills his place, opening on the 10th. Master Bennie—his SON—also appears on the same evening. May Fielding, a very good vocalist, and Nelly Edwards, have terminated their engagement. Miss Elsie De Concey, a relative of Mr. Wheeler, was one of the recent arrivals. Mrs. Rose Lang, who opened on the 3d, is the wife of Mr. Joe Lang, who is traveling with J. G. Campbell, the gentleman who is playing "Pomp."

FIRST CLASS ARTISTS are wanted for Shelby's Comique, Buffalo, N. Y., which will be opened for the season on April 26th. Address as per card elsewhere.

SMITH'S NEW OPERA HOUSE, East Saginaw, Mich., is said to be doing a good business with a company whose names are published in another column. Talent is also advertised for.

MR. SANFORD, Dave Conners, Dick Gorman and Miss Maud Lemoine, were the fresh faces that appeared at Tammany Hall, Bay City, Mich., during the past week.

CINCINNATI VARIETY HALL news, as given by our correspondent on April 7th, we append:—"At the Race Street Varieties this week Mr. Ed. Morley, who, in imitation of Jester, styles himself the 'man with the talking hand,' commenced an engagement. He sings a ballad in the first part, and in the olio does his 'talking hand' act—a very clever bit of ventriloquism—and also exhibits 'Punch and Judy,' something new hereabout, though Seamon's 'Peter Honts family' is on the same order. Mr. Morley only plays here this week, as he is engaged to travel with John Robinson's Circus. P. H. Seamon, ventriloquist and comedian, whose 'Peter Honts' family is very ludicrous when not seen too often, retired from the company yesterday, and in company with F. Gibbons, a song and dance artist, goes to Louisville to join the Hemling and Cooper Circus, with which Seamon travels as clown. Milt. Barlow, Ethiopian and Dutch comedian, and James Finley, Irish and Ethiopian comedian, opened at this theatre last night. Barlow's Dutch business is very good. He and Cavana occupied the ends, with Marsh Adams as interlocutor. Annie W. Hill, the club swinger, still remains, her stationary personations being much admired. The wind-up of the programme is the farce of 'Diamond Cut Dimond,' in which Finley takes the part of Pat McLaughlin, and the 'can-can' is introduced, with the overpowering Mlle. Dutin as Frailty..... Miss Anne Florence, whose leg was broken so unfortunately some few weeks since, is still in the city, unable to leave her room.....Mr. D. W. Drait, the former manager of the Winter Garden and Globe theatres, left this (last) week for Chicago, where he has some design of trying to secure the Olympic Theatre, which he formerly ran under the name of the Winter Garden.....At the Pacific Garden, Gibbonnoise, Prof. Francis and the Davenport Brothers continue to form the staple of the attractions, and there is nothing new to tell anent the other halls in German Porkopolis."

AT THE OPERA HOUSE, Grand Rapids, Mich., says "Eureka," large audiences continue to assemble to witness the entertainment given by Manager Davis. The Runnels Brothers continue to excite the greatest interest in their trapeze act and leap for life. J. L. Davis took a benefit on April 7th and the house was filled to overflowing. Several new people are billed for next (this week), among whom are Miss Belle King, Harry and Joe King and Emma Marsh.....At the Academy of Music the fresh attractions the past week were John Eagan and wife and Josie and Adele Farran.

BUSINESS AT THE VARIETIES THEATRE, Pittsburgh, Pa., is not heavy this (last) week, but good audiences are on hand every night, says our correspondent. John Jennings, Frank Bell and Ed. Firth put in an appearance on April 3d; Jennings' silver skate dance is a creditable act, and always receives an encore. Ed. Firth sings with considerable dash and spirit, and his changes are made with alacrity and effect. This is the last week of the Alhambra Ballet Troupe. The Rigi Sisters, and Kynock and Smith left for the east on the 6th inst. Charley Brown goes with the side show of Lent's Circus. On April 10th, Emma Gratian appears; also a novelty troupe of singers, dancers and comedians, comprised of Messrs. Arnold, Lowery, Selby, and the Hyam Sisters. The Ravenles, gymnasts, go to Philadelphia next week. Charley Howard, Morrissey and Emerson, Firth, Bell and Jennings remain. The burlesque of "Little Young Jack Sheppard" will be presented on the 10th inst. So writes our correspondent, J. C. H.

AT DONNELLY'S OLYMPIC, Brooklyn, L. I., Carleton and Miss Gilmer drew good houses last week, despite of the lenten season. This week Miss Kate Williams is to be the reigning belle of the Olympic stage.

FRANK GLASE FALKER is wanted for the Alhambra, late Seventh Street Opera House, Philadelphia, Pa., which will be opened for a spring and summer season on April 17th. See advertisement.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, Chicago, Ill., good paying houses and a general good performance seem to be the order of the day. We are except the conclusion of Johnny Redden's engagement, on the 1st, no important changes have taken place since my last. Tom Williams, the Misses Lon Rainford, Eunice Dunlap and Mattie Blanco are the reigning favorites, as of old. The balance of the company are respectively good in their specialties and go far toward making up a pleasing entertainment.....The Globe opens as a variety place of amusement on the 10th. The manager assures me that he has engaged a first class company, but for some reason best known to himself seems indifferent about disclosing their names. So writes our correspondent.

BOBBY STANTON, Ethiopian comedian and song and dance artist, can be addressed at Thompson's Opera House, Vicksburg, Miss., where he is now performing.

THE ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Seventh, below Arch street, Philadelphia, will be re-opened on Monday, the 17th inst., with a variety company under the joint management of Messrs. W. H. Smith and C. R. Rollins.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, Philadelphia, the company will be strengthened on the 10th inst. by the first appearance of Miss Susie Stanwood, Lida Showers, Lizzie Love, Annie Mack, Andy Shower and Sam Sanford. A new act entitled "Paris by Gaslight" will be produced.

THE NEW PHILADELPHIA VARIETIES, Philadelphia, under the management of Messrs. J. M. Mortimer & Co., is thriving amazingly, and presents a constant succession of crowded houses. Especially was this the case during the past week, when a programme of great novelty and variety was presented, the sisters re-appearing to their own in their pleasing character ballads, and had to pay the penalty of their amusing powers by responding to five or six encores nightly. The marvelous contortion act of the Prince Sadi d'Jalma gained for him well deserved applause. He also appeared in a very clever act on a ladder. The Venturoli ballet troupe, the Blonde Female Minstrels and the comic drama of "A Hundred Years Hence" were a few of the other prominent features. Lew Spencer also appeared in his Dutch comicalities. Miss Jennie Benson will make her first appearance at this establishment on the 10th inst.

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, New Orleans, La., the Gaiety Comique Company brought its engagement to a close on the 24 inst., and left for Mobile on the following morning, where they will play until the matinee of the 8th, and then proceed direct to Memphis, Tenn., where they will be due on the 10th inst. During their last week in New Orleans they presented an excellent olio performance, replete with gems. The crowning feature of the week's entertainment consisted in the display of prismatic fountains of gold and silver water, changing to every color of the rainbow, with its magnificent statuary act. Every evening during the week the entertainment concluded with Mr. Cavanagh's new drama entitled the "Fenian's Oath," which is by far his best production, notwithstanding its incongruities and sensational tendencies. The principal character, Dan Donovan, was sustained by Mr. Cavanagh in person with much power and effect, and was admirably supported by Harry Guion, as Andy O'Connel, and Miss Minnie Jackson, as the Lily of Killarney; while in the fairy spectacle Miss Jennie Engle appeared as the Fairy Queen, assisted by the full ballet as dancing fairies. So writes our correspondent "Crescent," on April 3d.

FRANK DILLON, Bobby Stanton, Billy St. George, the Misses Dell Melville, Eugene Irwin, Tillie Beaumont and Len Georgia were performing at Thompson's Opera House, Vicksburgh, Miss., during the week ending April 1st.

THE VARIETIES THEATRE, Peoria, Ill., is now permanently opened with a company, among whom are Johnny Buckina, song and dance man; Mary Olive, vocalist; Miss. Linetta Gassner; Nora Neile, vocalist and dancer; Harry Thompson, song and dance man, and H. Mendel, stage manager. Artists are wanted at all times. See advertisement.

TALENT is wanted for Valer's Winter Garden, Philadelphia. See advertisement.

ADA WRAY, banjoist and serio comic vocalist, opens at Wild's Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y., on April 10th, for four weeks.

BONNIE NELSON, protean vocalist, and Billy C. Hart, comedian, &c., who do change acts and other specialties, are prepared to accept engagements and can be addressed care of this office.

COOL BURGESS and a variety company is announced to perform in Hamilton, Canada, April 11th and 12th.

MISS NORSWORTHY'S characteristic entertainment is the title of a small variety troupe recently organized in Boston, Mass., which embraces the following artists:—Miss Hartford, pianist; M. M. Howard, the Ethiopean comedian, who now performs in a white face, and Mrs. Nighswander vocalist. The first performance by this company was given in Holliston, Mass., on April 6th.

YANKEE ROGERS' Yankee Comique troupe announced to perform in Geneseo, N. Y., April 11th; Mount Morris, 12th, 13th and 14th, and Dansville, 15th. The company is as follows:—Yankee Rogers, Lillie Rogers, E. Oscar Rogers, Master Clarence, George Vance, May Browning, W. A. Barker and Prof. Henry Stetson.

PROF. FABIAN, magician, appears for one night only at the Academy of Music, Grand Rapids, Mich., on April 10th, and the following performers are underlined to reappear:—Ida Morton, Lizzie Pauline, George F. Moore and Kitty Henderson.

THE METROPOLITAN THEATRE at Indianapolis, Ind., has attracted good audiences with a bill but slightly altered from last week's. The olio was excellently rendered. Mr. Charlie Benedict has replaced Mr. Walter Bray as colored comedian, and the entirely original banjo act Mr. Bray gained him many admirers. Sam Barth, late of the Academy, has been causing uproarious fun by his impersonation of "Teodies." Next week (April 10th and following days) Mr. Felix A. Vincent and Miss Hattie O'Neill, late of the Weber Troupe, appear in the burlesque of 'Ernani.' So writes our correspondent.

MISS EARLY BRAY, the wife of Walter Bray, Ethiopian comedian, died in Indianapolis, Ind., April 4th, of heart disease, at the age of twenty-nine years. The temporary funeral was attended by a majority of the professionals of that city.

THE MINNIE WELLS' Combination company closed its engagement at the Academy of Music, Albany, N. Y., on April 8th. Jennie McClennand and Ada Madigan, vocalists, joined their company during the week.

Negro Minstrelsy.

THE VERY ATTRACTIVE NATURE of the programmes nightly presented by Simmons & Slocum's Minstrels at their elegant Arch Street Opera House, Philadelphia, had the effect last week of drawing very large audiences. The singing of Messrs. Hamilton and Crosbie, in the first part, is deserving of much praise, while in the second part the eccentric humor of Lew Simmons, Billy Sweetnam and E. N. Slocum found abundant opportunities for display in the amusing sketches of "Like Master Like Man," "The Eighth Street Milliners" and "The African Twins," and the burlesque singing of W. Henry Rice and the neat style of dancing of the Kimpin Boys were also features of the entertainment. E. N. Slocum's original burlesque on "Rip Van Winkle" will be produced on the 10th inst., with Billy Sweetnam in the title role. The Order of Jolly Corks will have a benefit at this establishment on the 15th inst., when a very attractive programme will be presented.

AT SAM SANFORD'S OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, an entire change of programme was presented last week, and the Sanford, Partington and Wood troupes made their re-appearance, together with Miss Ada Stewart, Rose Teesdale, Mlle Salina and Steve Ashley. Business was excellent during the week. Sam Sanford appeared in the burlesque opera of "O Hush," and the Partingtons and variety troupes appeared in their specialties. This week several new stars will make their appearance, among others, Orville Pitcher and Harry Clark, and a pantomime company.

AT THE ELEVENTH STREET OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, the chief feature of the programme presented last week by Carncross and Dixey's Minstrels, was a burlesque written by Mr. Robert Craig, of the Arch Street Theatre, and entitled "Little Red Ike, the Barrelmaker; or, a Vote and no Question." The author, besides the opportunity for much humorous action, has furnished a dialogue more than usually diverting, and the principal characters were credibly sustained by Bobby Newcomb, Charles Gibbons and Joseph Cheever. The present week is announced to be the last one of the season, as the company starts on a western tour. Mr. James G. Russell, vocalist, will have a benefit here on the 14th inst.

FRANK BELL, eccentric song and dance performer, can be addressed at Trimble's Varieties, Pittsburgh, Pa.

JOHNNY TYRRE, Ethiopian comedian from California, advertises that he can be engaged.

SAM DEVINE, banjoist and comedian, who can be addressed care of this office, desires an engagement.

CORNELIUS and associates are wanted by Frank Hall, who advertises for Allen and Hall's Minstrels.

THE MORRIS BROTHERS' MINSTRELS performed in Syracuse, N. Y., April 7th and 8th, and were billed to remain the 10th, thence to Rochester, the 11th.

MANNING'S MINSTRELS in Chicago, Ill., are, as usual, says our correspondent, "being patronized by large and refined audiences. The Trip Around the World' can now be numbered among the things that were, as it was unfolded for the last time on the evening of the 1st, after a highly successful run of ten weeks. The company are presenting for the current week some of their old time programmes, the first part being replete with humor, wit, fresh and inspiring ballads, and a pleasing finale. Immediately following the first part Mr. R. M. Hall introduces his banjo solos, which are nightly received with rapturous applause. Manning and Hart nightly appear in a highly amusing act called 'The San Domingo Question,' after which Ben Cotton's favorite act, 'Uncle Jim's Visit,' is well done. Stevie Rogers' neat and artistic clog, a ballad by J. J. Kelly and the mirth-provoking sketch of 'Damon and Pythias,' constitute the balance of the bill. Senator Hart's benefit on Monday night proved a substantial affair, the house being packed as it has not been for months. 'The Century Flight' will be produced next Monday, the 10th.....There is but very little change in the bill at Hooley's Minstrels this week, the nearly acted and handsomely mounted burlesque, Abbott, Christie, Sanford and Mlle. Desere, contribute greatly to the excellence of the entertainment by their charming acting in the pantomime, 'Pit-I-Pat.' 'Cinderella' will be presented on the 10th."

WELCH, HUGHES AND WHITE'S BROOKLYN MINSTRELS were to open at Baltimore, Md., on Monday, April 10th; close a week at the Concordia Opera House, and three at the Maryland Institute.

M'MB RENTZ'S FEMALE MINSTRELS, under the management of M. B. Leavitt, commenced their spring and summer season on April 3d, at Fitchburg, Mass., and went thence to North Brookfield, 4th; Calcoopee, 5th; Westfield, 6th; Holyoke, 7th, and Springfield, 8th. The re-organized company includes the Misses Hattie Forrest, Fanny Vere, Nellie Richings, Allie Drayton, Blanche Dewery, Sallie Eldridge, Thomas Sully, John Purdy, J. H. Carroll, Johnny Leavitt, George Rose, Edward Miller, M. Kearney, A. L. Hopkins, William Carter, Dave Holbrook, Harry Brewster and M. B. Leavitt.

ELWOOD'S FEMALE MINSTRELS performed in Bridgeport, Conn., April 5th.

DUPREE AND BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS performed in Meadville, Pa., April 7th.

THE SAN FRANCISCO MINSTRELS performed in New Haven, Conn., April 4th and 5th; Hartford, 6th and 7th, and are announced to be in Albany, N. Y., 24th, 25th and 26th.

WELCH, HUGHES AND WHITE'S MINSTRELS performed in New Haven, Conn., April 8th.

SKIFF AND GAYLORD'S MINSTRELS are announced to commence a brief season in St. Louis, Mo., on April 10th.

Circuses.

WE DEPART FROM OUR USUAL CUSTOM in presenting a record of the following circus, after the publication of our annual list, because the performers engaged for it did not arrive in this country, from England, until Monday, April 3d, and the outside papers are by the Clipper containing the article referred to went to press on April 2d:—

HOWE'S GREAT LONDON CIRCUS AND SANGER'S ENGLISH MENAGERIE.

Officers—Manager, Robert Howes; Treasurer, Captain Thomas Christopher; Leader of British Cornet Band, J. Emidy; General Agent, Green Smith; Secretary, John Tryon; Master of Canvas, C. Richardson; Master of Horse, W. Lewis; Costumer, C. Roberts; Master of Ring, J. H. Charmon; Keeper of Chariots, George Whitby; Keeper of Carriage Horses, Thos. Lee.

Riders—Miss Lizzie Loya, M'lle Alice, James Jee, L. Joseph, Master Henry.

Clowns—David Seal, Jester; William Jee, gymnastic and tumbling clown; Signor Almont, Italian trick clown.

Gymnasts, Tumblers, &c.—Faust and Estor, the Brothers La Claire, Master Henry, James Jee.

Ponies—16 performing.

Horses—Number employed—360; horses, 150.

Chief Bill Poster—Daniel Bentley, assisted by Wallace, Thompson and Robins.

The procession will be a prominent feature and will consist of the following attractions:—Four heralds in full armor, mounted, carrying bannered trumpets; the car of Euterpe, upon the top of which will be seated Hendy's British Band, drawn by 10 Flemish horses; the car of Ceres, loaded with the choicest products of agriculture, and handsomely ornamented with sheaves of golden wheat and fine paintings, the whole surmounted with an azure Turkish canopy. The Chariot of Commerce, 25 feet in length and 25 feet in height, with practicable top to receive the machinery, and richly ornamented and gilded. In the rear, upon pedestals, are carved statues representing Britannia and the Genius of Columbia. From the centre of the top rises a large golden globe, upon which is left the full steel engraving, representing Britannia, supported by emblematic representatives of America in carved statuary. The Egyptian Dragon Chariot, modeled after the fashion of the ancient triumphal cars of the same name, and drawn by 10 horses. The Camel corps; a caravan of eight wild animal cages; a cavalcade of 20 horses, mounted by Roman warriors in full armor; Moors, Turks and Arabs, attended by a band of Amazons in full armor richly set with jewels; a Circassian Palanquin, constructed of wicker work, and drawn by six tamed zebras in harness; a cavalcade of 20 armed knights; the War Chariot of India, or Car of Juggernaut, 35 feet in length and 35 feet in height, with the top of which is a life size idol elephant, upon whose back is seated a Royal Hoodah, shielded by a canopy of silk. It will be drawn, it is said, by ten of the largest horses the world can produce.

In the menagerie will be found many rare animals, among which may be mentioned a brindled Gnu, or horned horse of Africa, an eland, ten laughing hyenas, performed by Mantano, an African cannibal, who holds the position of chief hunter to the Emperor and performing zebras, and a white or Polar bear. Six large ships were required to transport the menagerie and the paraphernalia of the circus. The stud of performing horses, which at San Francisco will be given at Mott Haven, N. Y., April 13th; and then it will exhibit in Harlem, 14th; Yorkville, 15th, and in the Rink, at the corner of third avenue and Sixty-third street, in New York city, for one week, commencing April 17th. During the performances in the latter place the canvas will be pitched inside of the rink.

LEE'S CIRCUS is organizing in Alvarado, Cal., and will inaugurate its tenting season in that town on or about April 20th. It has already a new wagon, new baggage wagons, and a new tent. The following is a list of the company:—Proprietor, Dr. Charles Pratt; George Constable, clown; George Talbert, principal rider; Leaman and Young America, gymnasts; Miss Polly Lee, rider and tight-rope performer; Miss Rose Lee, pony rider; Harry and Leverta Lee, riders, tumblers and general performers.

STAN ARBAUGH & CO'S Menagerie and Circus, Hyatt Frost, manager, is billed to perform in Keokuk, Iowa, April 17th.

A LADY RIDER, with a pair of trained horses, can be engaged for the tenting season. Address M. W. P., as per card in another column.

ADAM FOREPAUGH'S CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE exhibited to large audiences during the whole of last week in Washington, D. C., the United States Government reservation lot on Sixth street, just south of the canal. The animal dens, twenty-six in number, together with the tents and trappings, were shipped from Philadelphia by rail, while the two elephants, Romeo and little Annie, the four dromedaries and the camel, traveled overland, arriving in Washington on Sunday, the 26th inst., having been on the road since the preceding Tuesday. The animals, of which there is an extensive and rare collection, are exhibited in a mammoth tent, separate from that in which the equestrian entertainment is held, one ticket admitting to both exhibitions. The street procession was quite attractive, although there was no special feature. The chariot containing Tony Frank's Military Band was drawn by four beautiful brown horses, and the wagons being freshly painted, looked as bright as a new dollar. In the circus department there is Williams, the English jester; Mathews and Hunt, acrobats and trapeze performers; Mr. and Mrs. Lowanda, Miss Cordelia and Mlle. Virginia, equestrian performers; Messrs. Diefenbach, Morgan, Robinson, Melville and others. The side show attractions consist of the giant Australian children, an armless and toeless man, who gives quite an interesting performance; feats of strength and endurance by William Sparks, and a cage of monkeys and birds. On Saturday, 8th inst., after the evening performance, a special train conveyed the show to Baltimore, to which place the luggage vans will be shipped from Philadelphia.

ROBINSON, SPRINGUITH, Turnbaugh & Co.'s MASTODON MENAGERIE AND CIRCUS opened at the corner of Third and Mantua streets, Philadelphia, on April 3d. A correspondent, "Kit," thus writes about it:—"Though it rained in the evening the large canvas was filled to overflowing. The whole concern being new, it presented a handsome appearance, while the ring performances have rarely been excelled in this vicinity. Mr. Rosston, the equestrian director, produced some entrees that have not been surpassed in this country, and, for the information of showmen, I append a short description, its title, by the way, being 'Feramorz in the Vale of Cashmere.' It is taken from Moore's poem, 'Lalla Rookh,' where the king, disguised as the minstrel Feramorz, wins the love of Lalla Rookh and marries her as the ruler of Cashmere. The magnificent, beautiful and well trained horse of the band leader, Mr. Story, formerly with J. M. French's Circus, blows a terrific call, when a line of Arabs—real, genuine Bedouin Arabs—enter the circus, gorgeously arrayed in silks and satins, each one bearing an illuminated banner, rich in colors and spangles; following them, and led by two dusky sons of the desert, comes the elephant, Wallia Wallia, dark as night, and the entirely original hump of Oregon bearing her name spangled upon each side, while the border is of heavy gold bullion; then another line of Arabs file into the circle, with banners flying, in whose rear a number of richly dressed camels appear, led by sons of Mahomet. Immediately behind these comes the princess, Lalla Rookh, in a robe of crimson silk, attended by swarthy Arabs with dark-red turbans. She makes but a brief circle for a moment; the bugle rings out loud and clear, and twelve gaily caparisoned horses prance into the ring, mounted by riders gorgeously clad as the "Fire Worshippers," thus completely fulfilling Moore's poetic idea. Then the cavalcade slowly departs, and the horsemen complete the entree as is usually done in shows. Altogether, it is one of the finest entrees I have ever seen, and Mr. Rosston deserves great credit for the handsome and original manner in which it is performed. Mr. James E. Cooke, Mad. Carlotta de Berg, William Franklin, Chas. Burrows, Mons. Goroux, George Cutler, and Billy Porter and Charley Munroe, as clowns, make up a first class show—not to mention the great original Bedouin Arab Troupe of twelve members. So take it immensely here. I paid the show a visit at Wilmington, Del., on the 5th, and found the canvas filled to overflowing. They exhibit at Marietta, Pa., on the 14th, the same day that the Commonwealth Circus exhibits there.

MICH. DOUGHERTY, whose arrest in St. Louis we published a short time ago, has been honorably discharged by the courts. In this connection we have received another statement of the affair which led to his arrest. It seems the white Charley Noyes' Circus exhibited at Grasse City, on the 7th of January, two outsiders had some difficulty with a negro regarding a small sum of money, the negro calling in the United States Marshal, who arrested one of the offenders. He resold the negro, and the marshal let the mad go. At this the negro, not wishing the marshal to let him go, began to create a disturbance, when the marshal told him that unless he stopped he (the marshal) would be compelled to arrest the negro. The latter, becoming furious, fired into the crowd and ran away. The marshal commanded him to stop, but the negro not doing so, he ordered Mich. Dougherty, who was standing by looking on, to fire at him. Mich. did as he was ordered and the negro fell dead. This is said to be the story as proven in the court in St. Louis, and consequently Dougherty was discharged from custody.

THE GREAT COMMONWEALTH CIRCUS has been doing an excellent business since it opened at Conshohocken, Pa., on the 3d of April. They exhibited at Reading on the 7th, to a crowded canvas, and their aerostic display seems to be highly satisfactory to the visitors. The George W. Kelley, the famous leaper, and Wm. La Rue, the rider, are winning golden opinions by their wonderful performances. On the opening day, George Brown sprained an ankle very severely while leaping, and it was feared that he would be laid up for the summer, but he has been improving so fast that he appeared on the trapeze at Reading, his native place—on the 7th. The route of this show is to be through Harrisburg. On the 14th, they exhibit in opposition to Rosston, Springer, Henderson & Co.'s Menagerie and Circus, at Marietta, Penn.

BATCHELLER & DORIS, proprietors of John O'Brien's menagerie privileges, have secured 25 fin additional attraction for their side show, the Madagascar Albino Family. They have also secured Mat. Collier, the minstrel.

MR. JOHN MULLIGAN, professionally known as O'Keefe, a trapeze performer, died in Rome, N. Y., at the residence of his parents on April 8th. He had traveled with a number of circus companies and was a proficient performer. His death will be regretted by a large circle of friends.

JOHN ROBINSON'S COMBINATION CIRCUS AND MENAGERIE opened its season at the Rink, Cincinnati, on Monday, April 3d, and continued all the week, giving two performances daily to immense business. Our correspondent writes, saying:—"They have monopolized the show business for this week. Blind Tom at Mozart Hall having done literally nothing, and Stuart Robson at Wood's not very much better. The circus receipts have averaged nearly $2,000 per diem, at 50 and 25 cents admission. It might as well be mentioned, for the benefit of circus folk, that the Rink makes a very spacious inclosure, both for the ring and the menagerie, and that it is now about the only accessible bit of turf in town, as the popular lot on the corner of Baymiller and Eighth streets has been turned into a lumber yard. John Robinson has given up his circus to his sons this year, John P. Robinson, J. D. Robinson, Gil. N. Robinson, and Robert Stickney (who married Miss Kate Robinson

J. HOLMES GROVER

AND
"THE WAY OF THE WICKED"
IN LIVERPOOL.
TERRIFIC SUCCESS!!
HOUSES CROWDED!!
THE SENSATION OF THE DAY!!!

[From the Liverpool Leader, Feb. 28th, 1871.]

The Royal Colosseum Theatre has been crowded every night. "The Way of the Wicked" is highly sensational, and is peculiarly adapted to a popular audience. Mr. J. Holmes Grover, the author, who assumes the five leading characters in the piece, is not only a versatile actor who gives to each character its own special interest, but he has all the necessary power to sustain the interest of the drama and secure the sympathy of the audience. The presence of Mr. Grover before the curtain is loudly demanded at the close of each act, and his appearance is the signal for vociferous applause. Last night was appointed for Mr. Grover's benefit, and he was greeted by a crowded house.

[From the Liverpool Evening Express, Feb. 14th, 1871.]

The American comedy-drama, written by Mr. Grover, entitled "The Way of the Wicked," is nightly being performed to crowded houses at the Royal Colosseum Theatre. The piece is of the highest sensational character and takes well with the audience, affording the greatest scope for Mr. J. Holmes Grover in his varied character acting. In foiling the "Knights of the Green Baize," and tracking "The Way of the Wicked," Mr. Grover assumes several disguises, and sustains several parts, and we must compliment him alike upon his changes of "make up" and his complete dissassociation of one assumption from the other. He has a good voice and presence, and acts with considerable skill. 2-1t*
